PREFACE

The plan of the preceding volumes of this edition has been followed in the preparation of the present volumes. It is modified only by the necessity of making the impossible attempt to condense within a certain number of pages a whole literature.

Of the imperfect success which has crowned the labour no one can be so fully aware as the Editor. Nevertheless, the work is given to the public in the trust that it will furnish some facilities to the study of this great poem, and aid in preparing the way for better editions than this.

The First Volume contains The Text, with a collation of the texts of the Quartos and Folios, and of some thirty modern editions, together with Notes and Comments from the Editors whose texts are collated, and, added to these, such verbal and grammatical criticisms from other quarters as seemed to be valuable; in some instances, notes are given that have little or no value, except as hints of the progress or of the madness of Shakespearian criticism.

As a general rule, in the Commentary preference is given to verbal over æsthetic criticism. Whenever editors whose texts are collated have indulged in æsthetic suggestions, these, in the main, have been retained. But in other cases æsthetic criticisms have been reserved for Volume II, except where the notes were of too brief and fragmentary a character to be separated from the context.

This difference in the treatment of verbal and æsthetic criticism is observed solely with reference to the arrangement of the mass of material, not because æsthetic criticism is inferior in value to verbal. Indeed, does not the value of the latter depend in many cases more or less directly upon the former?
There is a disposition abroad to disparage æsthetic criticisms of Shakespeare. An excellent edition of the Poet, now issuing from the press, discards it wholly; the editor, whose opinions are entitled to great respect, regarding it as an impertinence, and stigmatising it generally as 'sign-post criticism.' Unquestionably, there has been much commenting upon Shakespeare, which, ignoring the humblest intelligence in the reader, is flat, stale, and unprofitable, a nuisance and a weariness of the flesh. But shall we ignore the possible existence of a keener insight than our own? Is the gift of reading between the lines, so essential to the appreciation of dramatic literature, universal? Have the generality of us eyes to see what is there written? Who can fail to be enlightened and delighted with such fine criticism (as is given in Volume II, p. 167) of the very first scene of this tragedy, and which the Editor regrets did not come to his notice in time to be inserted in the Commentary, where it vitally belongs? Are we not to listen eagerly and reverently when Coleridge or Goethe talks about Shakespeare? Can we fail to prize the flashes of light (all too few) thrown here and there upon Shakespeare by Charles Lamb, that genius, wasted in the India House, whom, had England known the gift of God, she would have pensioned bountifully and set to recording the thoughts these plays evoked in him, that we might be brought into nearer communion with the great Poet than, with all our laborious verbal criticism, we have yet been able to reach?

To be sure, such commentators as these, and Schlegel, and Hazlitt, and Mrs Jameson, and Christopher North, and Garrick (such acting as his æsthetic criticism of a high order) are rare, and exception may be made in favour of all master-minds like these. But the present Editor, in full memory of the many weeks and months spent in reading criticisms on Hamlet, fully agrees with a keen and eloquent critic in Blackwood's Magazine (more likely than not, Thomas Campbell) when he says: 'We ask not for a picture of the whole landscape of the soul, nor for a guide who shall point out all its wonders. But we are glad to listen to every one who has travelled through the kingdoms of Shakespeare. Something interesting there must be even in the humblest journal; and we turn with equal pleasure from the converse of those who have climbed over the magnificence of the highest mountains there, to the lowlier tales of less ambitious pilgrims, who have sat on the green and sunny knoll, beneath the whispering tree, and by the music of the gentle rivulet.'

Moreover, the present Editor freely acknowledges the great interest he has taken in witnessing the power of Shakespeare's genius as shown in its stimulating effect upon minds of a high order. In the endeavour to solve the mystery of Hamlet, the human mind, not only in its clear radiance but in the sad twilight of its eclipse, has been subjected to the most searching analysis. This ideal character, Hamlet, has been assumed to be very nature, and if we fail to reach a solution of the problem it presents, the error lies in us and in our analysis; not in Shakespeare. Such have been the revelations of the wisdom and genius of the First of Poets found in the works which attempt to ravel all this matter out, and from which extracts have been made in the second of these volumes, that the present Editor was not long in making up his mind to bear patiently, for the sake of these, the sea of troubles (sign-post criticisms) that he has been compelled to encounter in the prosecution of his work. To appreciate what is beautiful is one thing; to be informed of what it is that delights us is a different and an added pleasure. To vary the language of another: 'The worth of [Shakespeare] must rise as his grandeur is comprehended, and our joy in his harmony and beauty will be heightened the more fully he is understood.'

"I grieve not that ripe knowledge takes away
'The charm that [Shakespeare] to my boyhood bore,
'For with the insight cometh day by day
'A greater bliss than wonder was before.'"

The Editor has availed himself of the liberty to form his own text afforded him by the fact that the texts of all the ancient authoritative editions are virtually printed on the same page. He has followed no other. If his text appears to follow the Cambridge Edition, it is merely because that edition has been used to print from.

It has been his settled principle, as it was that of Dr Johnson: 'that the reading of the ancient books is probably true, and therefore not to be disturbed for the sake of elegance, perspicuity, or mere improvement of the sense. For though much credit is not due to the fidelity, nor any to the judgement of the first publishers, yet they who had the copy before their eyes were more likely to read it right than we who read it only by imagination. . . . My first labour is always to turn the old text on every side, and try if there be any interstice through which light can find its way. . . . 'I have adopted the Roman sentiment, that it is more honourable to save a citizen than to kill an enemy, and have been more careful to protect than to attack.'

A list of editions collated in the Textual Notes, and an explanation of the abbreviations and symbols there employed will be found at the close of the Appendix.

In the Second Volume is given, first: a Reprint of the Quarto of 1603. This earliest Quarto differs from the rest so materially that a full or intelligible record of its various readings in the form of foot-notes is simply impossible. In a note on 'The Date and the Text' will be found an account of the different theories respecting its origin.

Then follows The Hystorie of Hamlet, the story on which, perhaps, was founded either this tragedy or the lost original drama which Shakespeare afterward changed to its present shape.

After this comes a translation of a curious old German tragedy called Fratricide Punished, or Prince Hamlet of Denmark. An account of it will be found in a short prefatory note.

Then come the English Critics, and a discussion of the one great insoluble mystery of Hamlet's sanity. Without for one moment wishing to assume the responsibility of umpire, the present Editor thinks it no more than right to call attention to one fact which it seems to him should be kept in view on entering upon this discussion—viz. where the testimony of experts is invoked, and their testimony is unanimous, the speculations and opinions of others, laymen and inexpert, cannot be expected to carry much weight. In courts of justice, every day, the testimony of experts is accepted in cases involving liberty or confinement, life or death, and we cannot, it is submitted, be so inconsistent as wholly to rule out that testimony here. If, therefore, we listen to experts at all, we can hardly refuse our assent to their unanimous verdict. Despite all this, the present Editor's opinion, which, after what he has just said, he cannot, as a layman, expect to have any value, and which, in view of the magnitude of the discussion, he would be the last, as an Editor, to set forth at length, is that Hamlet is neither mad, nor pretends to be so. And in view of the fact that he has faithfully read and reported all the arguments on that side, the Editor begs the advocates of the theory of feigned insanity to allow him, out of reciprocal courtesy, to ask how they account for Hamlet's being able, in the flash of time between the vanishing of the Ghost and the coming of Horatio and Marcellus, to form, horror-struck as he was, a plan for the whole conduct of his future life?

Then follow Notes on The Names and Characters, on the Duration of the Action, on Garrick's Version, and on Actors' Interpretations; it is greatly to be regretted that in this last department our accounts of how great actors spoke are so meagre. As Cibber says of Betterton: 'Pity it is that the momentary Beauties flowing from an harmonious Elocution cannot, like those of Poetry, be their own Record: That the animated Graces of the Player can live no longer than the instant Breath and Motion that presents them, 'or at best, can but faintly glimmer through the Memory or imperfect Attestation of a few surviving Spectators. Could how Betterton spoke be as easily known as what he spoke, then might you 'see the Muse of Shakespeare in her Triumph, with all her Beauties, rising into real Life, and charming the Beholder. But, since 'this is so far out of the reach of description, how shall I show 'you Betterton?'

Next comes the German Criticism.

With the rashness of ignorance, the present Editor, in laying out his plan for this edition, proposed to himself to preface it with an essay upon the remarkable literature which this great drama has created in Germany. His idea was to give the views of all the writings on Hamlet which have appeared down to the present time in that country,—of a l, that is, which he could procure. But, in the work of preparation for such an essay, after going carefully through what, at a rough and moderate computation, amounts to some two thousand pages and upwards, he finds himself,—no surprising discovery,—quite unequal to the task. The sense of his incompetency is, however, greatly relieved by the one very clear conviction with which he emerged from the metaphysical atmosphere: the proposed essay, could it be written, would utterly defeat a purpose to be kept religiously in view in the preparation of this edition of Hamlet,—namely, compression. It would far exceed in bulk all the rest of the volumes. The Editor therefore must restrict himself to a simple statement of the principles by which he has been guided in the selection of extracts from the German critics.

First: All unfavourable criticism of fellow-critics is excluded as much as possible. Although our German friends are somewhat jealous of their well-deserved reputation as a nation of thinkers, they sometimes seem, individually, very much disposed to grudge one another a share in that distinction. The propriety of the exclusion observed is obvious. To confound Goethe, Schlegel, or Tieck is one thing, to elucidate Shakespeare is another. It is curious to observe how much of Shakespearian criticism,—and this applies to English as well as German,—is devoted to hostile criticism of fellow-critics, living and dead. It is submitted that this it is, and not 'sign-post criticism' alone, which has tended to bring disrepute on this branch of literature. 'I know not,' says Dr Johnson, 'why our editors should with such implacable anger persecute their predecessors. Οὐ νεκρὸν μὴ δάνοινεν, the dead, it is true, can make no resistance, they may be attacked with great security; but, since they can neither feel nor mend, the safety of mauling them seems greater than the pleasure; nor, perhaps, could it much misbecome us to remember, amidst our triumphs over the nonsensical and senseless, that we likewise are men; that debemus morti, and, as Swift observed to Burnet, shall soon be among the dead ourselves.'

Second: The selection is confined as closely as possible to one point: the character of Hamlet. It has been hardly possible to observe this rule with absolute strictness. Tieck's theory in regard to Ophelia's relationship to Hamlet bears so intimately upon the character of both, and has made so deep an impression upon the popular mind, as to demand its insertion here.

Lastly: Whatever has been found that is strikingly original, although not of necessity true, has been included among these extracts; such as the wonderful connection which Karpf imagines he has discovered between the 'courier's kibe' and Thor's frozen toe, and Flathe's opinions concerning the family of Polonius. Of course the reader will not suppose where no bracketed exclamation-marks appear, that all these criticisms or commentaries are adopted by the present Editor; and this remark the Editor wishes most emphatically to apply to all the comments and notes, English and German, throughout these volumes. He has an especial aversion to that cheap and easy way of expressing dissent, or, as it most commonly reads, contempt. He can recall but one instance of its use, and even there it would have been avoided could the structure of the sentence, condensed to save space, have left the paternity of the note unambiguous. Those who read or study these volumes may be safely trusted to discover for themselves the wisdom or the folly of the critics, and the Editor gladly forgoes the pleasure of displaying how much wiser he is than those whom he cites.

The endeavour, in all honesty, has been to select from every author the passages wherein he appears to most advantage, and wherein also he contributes his best thought to the elucidation of the great tragedy. At the same time, it must be confessed, there has been a little amusement had, now and then, in citing passages where our admirable friends stumble and fall in the interpretation of words, as when Gerth states that slings (in the 'slings and arrows of outrageous fortune') are the cables with which buoys are attached to sunken anchors or are placed to indicate hidden reefs or shoals.

Notwithstanding these trivial deductions, no one who has made any acquaintance with the labours of Shakespeare students in Germany can fail to be impressed by the excellence they show even in the department of verbal criticism. It is too late a week with Schmidt's Lexicon and a dozen Shakespeare Yearbooks on our shelves to cast any slurs on German Shakespeare criticism. Were such the intention, German criticism could well endure them with equanimity. For the indefatigable labour, the keen analysis, the sympathetic and loving appreciation which characterise the treatment of ShakespearE by German men of letters, command the warmest admiration. Their devotion to this tragedy in particular is impressive. Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of their land commentators on it arise; not only at the prominent centres of culture, but in towns and villages, whose names English-speaking people have perhaps never heard of, do these writers spring up. Even while the Editor is closing his labours, two more volumes on Hamlet have been added to the list. Although it would be a comfort to think that he had collected all, yet,—Rusticus expectat, &c. Verily, given a printing-press on German soil (and the printing-press is indigenous there), and, lo! an essay on Hamlet. Let Germans themselves ridicule this devotion if they will. No man born to the inheritance of the language of ShakespearE can regard it otherwise than with respectful admiration and pride, or fail to welcome the aid which it contributes to an enlightened appreciation of the great Poet. We all hold ourselves partakers of his glory, and such fine adoration of our household divinity we accept as a flattering tribute to ourselves.

And what a tribute is it to Shakespeare's genius! Here, at last, we may venture to set a limit to his imagination. Not even he could have imagined such a fame. No one of mortal mould (save Him 'whose blessed feet were nailed for our advantage to the bitter 'cross') ever trod this earth, commanding such absorbing interest as this Hamlet, this mere creation of a poet's brain. No syllable that he whispers, no word let fall by any one near him, but is caught and pondered as no words ever have been, except of Holy Writ. Upon no throne built by mortal hands has ever 'beat so fierce a light' as upon that airy fabric reared at Elsinore.

In Shakespeare's allusions to Wittenberg the Germans have found a direct intimation that Hamlet was written with especial reference to their own nation; and Freiligrath struck a keynote, which found an echo in all hearts, when he exclaimed: 'Germany 'is Hamlet.' Lessing, that most healthy and earnest of German scholars, 'the Englishman born in Germany', was the first, now more than a hundred years ago, to announce to his countrymen the advent of Shakespeare. His masterly criticisms of the Hamburg Theatre, written in the interest of the great English Poet, levelled Voltaire and the French school of taste, and opened the path ten years later for the extraordinary success that attended Brockmann's Hamlet. The enthusiasm which Brockmann inspired in this character was unprecedented in Germany, and can be paralleled only by Mr Irving's recent success in London. Fine steel engravings appeared, representing different scenes of the tragedy; silver medals were struck in honour of the popular actor, and, what was before unheard of on the Berlin stage, he was called before the curtain after the play.

The enthusiasm for Hamlet, thus kindled, has not died out to this day. Goethe's interpretation, everywhere as widely known as the play itself, quickened the popular admiration by apparently relieving the tragedy of its painful mystery; and although there are not wanting keen critics who dissent from Goethe's interpretation of Hamlet's character, yet as a piece of criticism it filled Lord Macaulay 'with wonder and despair,' and still underlies most of the theories, English and German, that have since appeared.

The last theory of Hamlet's character, which has arrested special attention in Germany by the bold and animated way in which it has been set forth by its chiefest expounder, Werder, was first proposed in strong terms by Klein. It sweeps aside every vestige of Goethe's explanation, with all theories akin to it. It affirms Hamlet to be a man of action, never at a loss, never wavering, taking in at once the position of affairs, adjusting himself thereto with admirable sagacity, and instantly acting with consummate tact as occasions require. A theory so directly opposed to all accepted ideas of Hamlet claims a full exposition. It has been found impossible, in justice, to compress it into a narrower space than it occupies in the Appendix.

The Editor is well aware that he incurs some hazard in thus selecting extracts from the German essayists. If he has unwittingly committed any injustice, and omitted to notice theories for which their authors claim originality, he can only plead innocence of intention, and the difficulty he has found in fathoming the precise meaning of metaphysical treatises, dive as deeply as he might into 'the depths of his consciousness.'

German actors and stage-managers have long felt a want unknown in English-speaking lands. There are probably not three theatres in Germany that use the same translation or adaptation of Shakespeare. To meet this want of uniformity, a selection of the dramas was issued by Eduard and Otto Devrient, a name that will ensure everywhere a respectful attention to all suggestions thus endorsed,—suggestions, be it understood, never the crude conceits of the moment, but practically tested during many years of highly-famed practice on the stage. In their rendition of Hamlet by the Messrs Devrient, it is a noteworthy fact that for scenic representation the First Quarto has been proved by them to be more effective than the Second Quarto or Folio, which is the basis of the ordinary acting copies. Over thirty years ago Hunter in England and Rapp in Germany maintained the higher dramatic power of the First Quarto over the Second Quarto in the order of the scenes and in its general effectiveness. But it was reserved for the Messrs Devrient to put these theories to the test with the best possible result, as they say, and as their fame warrants the belief.

The claim for Hamlet's youth, urged by the Messrs Devrient, deserves attention. Hamlet as a youth of nineteen or twenty certainly possesses a charm which can hardly belong to the mature age of thirty; besides, this idea of him reconciles many discrepancies which have set commentators at variance. It accords with his wish to return to Wittenberg; with the election of his uncle over him as king by the nobles; and it also lessens the age of the Queen and our disgust at the mutiny in a matron's bones. A discussion of this question will be found in the notes on V, i, 153. This puzzle about Hamlet's age arises, to a large extent, it is submitted, from our losing sight of Shakespeare's method of dealing with the dramatic element of time,—a method whereby in the most artful manner he conveys two opposite ideas of its flight: swiftness and slowness; by one series of allusions we receive the impression that the action of the drama is driving ahead in storm, while by another series we are insensibly beguiled into the belief that it extends over days and months. Attention was called to this wonderful art of SHAKESPEARE's by both HALPIN and CHRISTOPHER NORTH, at about the same time; the former admirably analyzed, with reference to it, the Merchant of Venice, and the latter revealed its working in the case of Macbeth and Othello. If we turn to this present play of Hamlet, we see how throughout, wherever time comes in as an element, we are subject to SHAKESPEARE's glamour and gramarye. Horatio is introduced to us as one familiar with all the every-day occurrences in Denmark, the gossip of the court, the cause of the post haste and rummage in the land; in the next scene, on the very same day, Hamlet greets him with such surprise that we get the impression that he is fresh from Wittenberg; if we stop to think, we remember that he came to see the old king's funeral, and that took place nearly two months before, and in that time he might well have learned all the political news; but then he must have been about the court, and it is a little strange that Hamlet had not met him. As spectators of the play, we do not stop to think this out, but accept without question each impression that the poet intends to make on us. Again, Polonius, who assuredly knew the latest item of court gossip, seems as much surprised at Ophelia's account of Hamlet's strange behaviour as Ophelia herself; it was evidently a new thing to him, and yet when he goes directly to the King, the latter has been so long cognisant of Hamlet's 'transformation' that he had sent for Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to help him find out its cause; and Polonius, too, speaks of Hamlet's 'lunacy' as a fact well known and of long standing; and the very next day after this Hamlet has a second interview with Ophelia, when she asks him how he does 'this many a day,' and tells him that she has remembrances of his which she has longed long to re-deliver. Again, Hamlet tells Rosencrantz and Guildenstern that he has 'of late foregone all custom of exercises.' In the last scene Hamlet tells Horatio that he has been in 'continual practice of late.' These are not inconsistencies. They are not oversights on the part of SHAKESPEARE. They belong to the two series of times, the one suggestive and illusory, and the other visible and explicitly indicated. Halpin calls them the protractive series and the accelerating series. Christopher North calls them Shakespeare’s ‘two clocks.’ As another instance of the way in which the long time is adroitly insinuated in this Play, note the passage, where Claudius describes to the Queen the events that have followed the death of Polonius: ‘the people are muddied, thick, and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,’ which of course was the work not of an hour nor of a day, but perhaps of weeks; it must have taken some time for this knowledge to have reached the king’s ears; then Laertes has ‘returned in secret from France, feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds.’ This, too, consumes time, and the very time which we feel, without stopping to compute it, is necessary for Laertes to gather the populace to his side and mature his plans for rebellion. From what we here learn, Laertes may have returned from France weeks before, and yet when he bursts into the King’s presence and demands his father, the short time which is essential for keeping up the tension of the passion comes into play, and we get the impression that Laertes has just landed and has rushed in hot haste to the King’s palace. And so vivid is this impression that Laertes is always held up by critics and commentators as an example to Hamlet in the speed with which he sweeps to avenge his father’s death; whereas, as we see from this speech of Claudius, Laertes may have been almost as dilatory as Hamlet, and may have allowed ‘buzzers’ day after day ‘to infect his ears,’ or kept himself ‘in clouds’ for weeks. The short time is again thrust upon us by showing us Laertes ignorant of Ophelia’s insanity. Apparently, Laertes has not even taken the time to go to his own home after landing from France. And these instances may be multiplied, doubtless, by any attentive reader of the tragedy. Indeed, is not the whole theory of Hamlet’s procrastination to a large extent due to this ‘legerdemain’ of Shakespeare’s in the matter of time? There are not wanting critics who, counting off the days on only one of Shakespeare’s clocks, conclude the whole action within a week or ten days,—scant room for procrastination, where the killing of a king is the aim. As Christopher North says: 'Shakespeare, in his calmer constructions, shows in a score of ways, weeks, months; that is therefore the true time, or call it the historical time. Hurried himself, and hurrying you, on the torrent of passion, he forgets time; and a false show of time, to the utmost contracted, arises . . . . If any wiseacre should ask, 'How do we manage to stand the "known together-proceeding of two times?"' the wiseacre is answered, 'We don't stand it,—for we know nothing about it. "We are held in a confusion and a delusion about the time."' We have effect of both,—distinct knowledge of neither. We have suggestions to our Understanding of extended time,—we have movements of our Will by precipitated time. . . . If you ask me,—which judiciously you may,—what or how much did the Swan of Avon intend and know of all this astonishing legerdemain, when he sang thus astonishingly? Was he, the juggler, jugged by aerial spirits,—as Puck and Ariel? I put my finger to my lip, and nod to him to do the same. . . . A good-natured Juggler has cheated your eyes. You ask him to show you how he did it. He does the trick slowly,—and you see. "Now, "good Conjurer, do it slowly and cheat us." "I can't. I cheat you by doing it quickly. To be cheated, you must not "see what I do; but you must think that you see." When we inspect the Play in our closets, the Juggler does his trick slowly. We sit at the Play, and he does it quick.' Just as Shakespeare has dealt with the time of the whole tragedy he has dealt with the age of Hamlet; in the earlier scenes he is in the very hey-day of primy nature, but the effect of the fearful experience which he undergoes is to quicken and stimulate mightily his powers of thought,—to ripen his intellect prematurely. Therefore at the close, as though to smooth away any discrepancy between his mind and his years, or between the execution of his task and his years, a chance allusion by the Grave-digger is thrown out, which, if we are quick enough to catch, we can apply to Hamlet's age, and we have before us Hamlet in his full maturity.
In the selection of French Criticisms which follow the German, it may be thought strange that no reference is to be found to Ducis's version of Hamlet,—that unlucky butt for English and German ridicule. No extracts would do it justice, and to insert the whole was impossible. But would it not be well, between our fits of laughter over it, to recall the year in which it first appeared? In 1769 the first German translation of Hamlet was only three years old, and Lessing almost single-handed was in the thick of his battle-royal with the French school of art, then supreme in Germany, and of which Ducis's Hamlet is no unfair representative in the main features; seven years later, Brockmann, the idol of the German stage, played Hamlet at first in Heuffeld's version, in which Laertes is omitted and Hamlet is the prosperous successor of Claudius (afterwards, it is true, Brockmann acted Schroeder's version, which is nearer the original, although Hamlet survives the King's attempt to poison him, and the fencing-scene is omitted). And at that time, on the English stage, Garrick and his 'showmen' were 'drawing about' Lear with Nahum Tate's 'hook in the nostrils of the Leviathan.' It is to be apprehended that no German nor English tongue dare wag in rude noise at Ducis, who, after all, did not assume to translate Shakespeare, but merely adapt him. From the French point of view (and is it not unreasonable to demand that a Frenchman should have any other?) it is not difficult to regard Ducis's version as a powerful drama; and we know that in the hands of Talma its effect was signal.

There now remains the agreeable duty to record the names of those from whom I have received aid.

At the very outset, however, it is with sorrow that I am reminded that Professor Allen, upon whom in years past I leaned so heavily, and to whom it was a pleasure to be indebted, has joined the group of

'Precious friends, hid in death's dateless night.'

Had he lived, many an error now lurking in these volumes would have been detected and obliterated. I am reconciled to their presence, since they show how much I have been indebted to him in the past.

My cordial thanks are hereby extended to J. Payne Collier, esq., Mr Albert Cohn, Professor Corson, Joseph Crosby, esq., Rev. F. G. Fleay, Prof. Dr Elze, F. J. Furnivall, esq., Dr Hering, Rev. H. N. Hudson, Dr Kellogg, Dr Ray, W. J. Rolfe, esq., William Lowes Rushton, esq., S. Timmins, esq., Richard Grant White, esq., Justin Winsor, esq., and William Aldis Wright, esq.

My especial acknowledgements are due to Dr C. M. Ingleby for valuable suggestions prompted by his keen, critical taste and varied learning, and for stray notes and readings which might otherwise have escaped my notice; to A. I. Fish, esq., for the valuable contribution he has made to Hamlet literature in the English Part of the Bibliography; and to J. Parker Norris, esq., for his selections in reference to Actors' Interpretations, and for numberless acts of thoughtful kindness; and to Mr L. F. Thomas, the reader of the proofs, the excellent representative of a class to whom authors are under deep though often unacknowledged obligations.

There yet remain three: to my father, Rev. Dr Furness, I am indebted for all the translations from the German (except the Bestrafte Brüdermord) in the Second Volume; the mere statement of this debt reveals my utter bankruptcy in adequate expressions of gratitude. More is his due than more than all can pay. Be it remembered, that I alone am responsible for the selection of the extracts.

To my sister, Mrs A. L. Wister, for the fine translation of Freiligrath's Deutschland ist Hamlet.

And to Mrs Furness for the Index in the First Volume and the Table of Contents in the Second.

In conclusion, let me add that I do not flatter myself that this is an enjoyable edition of Shakespeare; I regard it rather as a necessary evil,—so evil that I should sometimes question the propriety of its existence were it not that I am encouraged by the words of Dr Johnson, for whose Preface to his edition of Shakespeare advancing years add only increasing admiration. 'Let "him," says Dr Johnson, "that is yet unacquainted with the "powers of Shakespeare, and who desires to feel the greatest "pleasure that the drama can give, read every play, from the first "scene to the last, with utter negligence of all his commentators. "When his fancy is once on the wing, let it not stoop at cor- "rection or explanation. When his attention is strongly engaged, "let it disdain alike to turn aside to the name of Theobald and "of Pope. Let him read on through brightness and obscurity, "through integrity and corruption; let him preserve his compre- "hension of the dialogue and his interest in the fable. And "when the pleasures of novelty have ceased, let him attempt ex "actness and read the commentators." H. H. F.

Scene I] GILDON (Remarks, &c., 1709, p. 404): This scene, I have been assured, Sh. wrote in a Charnal House, in the midst of the Night. SEYMOUR (p. 138): This whole scene appears unnecessary to the design and conduct of the play, and might with advantage be omitted. The hand of Sh. is visible in it occasionally, but it is part of that undigested plan which is manifest throughout the play. [Seymour finds the same fault in Macbeth and Lear. Ed.]

CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: In this play the Acts and Scenes are marked in the FF only as far as II, ii, and not at all in the Qq.

I. Who's there] COLERIDGE (p. 148): That Shakespeare meant to put an effect in the actor's power in these very first words is evident from the impatience expressed by the startled Francisco in the line that follows. A brave man is never so peremptory as when he fears that he is afraid. TSCHICHWITZ finds a 'psychological motive' in thus representing Bernardo as so forgetful of all military use and wont as to challenge Francisco who is on guard. Evidently Bernardo is afraid to meet the Ghost all alone, and it is because he feels so unmanned that his last words to Francisco are to bid Horatio and Marcellus make haste. [For other instances of irregularities in metre, which may be explained by the custom of placing ejaculations, appellations, &c. out of the regular verse, see ABBOTT, § 512. Ed.]

ACT I, SC. 1.

Fran. Nay, answer me; stand, and unfold yourself.  2
Ber. Long live the king!
Fran. Bernardo?
Ber. He.  5
Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.
Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.
Fran. For this relief much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart.
Ber. Have you had quiet guard?
Fran. Not a mouse stirring.  10

6. carefully] cheerfully F, F'.
7. now struck] new-struck. Steev. conj. El. Heussi.  7, 8, 23. 'Tis F, F.
10. guard f] guard. F'.

2. me] JENNENS: This is the emphatic word. [HANMER printed it in italics. Ed.] Francisco, as the sentinel on guard, has the right of insisting on the watch-word, which is given in Bernardo's answer.

3. King] MALONE supposed this sentence to have been the watch-word, but PYE (p. 308) believes that it corresponds to the former usage in France, where, to the common challenge Quoi vive? the answer was Vive le Roi, like the modern answer, 'A friend.' And DELIUS points out that shortly afterwards to the same challenge Hor. and Mar. give a different response.

6. upon your hour] CLARENDON: An unusual phrase, meaning 'just as your hour is about to strike.' Compare Rich. III.: III, ii, 5; IV, ii, 115; Meas. for Meas. IV, 1, 17. As Fran. speaks the clock is heard striking midnight. [See ABBOTT, I, 191; Mach. III, 1, 16; V, iii, 7.]

7. now] DYCE: Is not the sense the same whether we read new or 'now'?
8. much] ABBOTT, p. 51: Much, more, is frequently used as an ordinary adjective like the Scotch nicle, and the Early English muchel.
9. heart] HUNTER (ii, 212): As no particular reason appears for the melancholy of this insignificant personage, it is probable that the poet meant by this little artifice to prepare the minds of the spectators for a tragical story. Such a remark at the opening of a play disposed their minds, unconsciously perhaps to themselves, to the solemnity of thought and feeling which suited the awful scenes soon to be unfolded.

STRACHEY (p. 24): The key-note of the tragedy is struck in the simple preludings of this common sentry's midnight guard, to sound afterwards in ever-spread ing vibrations through the complicated though harmonious strains of Hamlet's own watch through a darker and colder night than the senses can feel.

10. Not a mouse stirring] COLERIDGE (p. 148): The attention to minute sounds—naturally associated with the recollection of minute objects, and the more familiar and trifling, the more impressive from the unusualness of their producing any impression at all,—gives a philosophic pertinency to this image; but it has likewise its dramatic use and purpose. For its commonness in ordinary conversation tends to produce the sense of reality, and at once hides the poet, and yet approximates the reader or spectator to that state in which the highest poetry will appear, and in its component parts, though not in the whole composition, really is the language of nature. If I should not speak it, I feel I should be thinking it,—the voice only is the poet's,—the words are my own.

13. rivals] Warburton: That is, partners [which is the word used here in Q.—White.] Ritson: Thus, in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1635: 'Tullia.
Arms, associate him. Armes. A rival with my brother in his honours.' And in The Tragedy of Hoffmann, 1674 [II, iii, p. 29. Reprint 1852], 'And make thee rival in those governments.' See also rivalry in Ant. & Cleop. III, v, 8. Warner (Var. 1821): Read '— Horatio, and Marcellus The rival of' &c. because Hor. is a gentleman of no profession, and there is but one person in each watch. Caldecott: See corrival, 1 Hen. IV: I, iii, 207, and IV, iv, 31. Wedgwood: Lat.
rivalis, explained in different ways from rivalus, a brook; by some from the struggles between herdsmen using the same watercourses; by others as signifying those who dwell on opposite sides of the stream. Clarendon: This is the only passage of Sh. in which the word is employed in its earlier and rarer sense [as given by Warburton].

14. Coleridge (p. 148): Observe the gradual transition from the silence and the still recent habit of listening in Francisco's 'I think I hear them,'—to the more cheerful call out, which a good actor would observe, in the 'Stand ho! Who is there?'

16. Give] Caldecott: That is, May He, who has the power of giving, so disperse; or, I give you good night, like the Latin dare salutem. Clarendon: The more probable ellipsis is 'God give you.' We do not find the complete phrase 'I give you good night,' but we have many examples of 'God give you good even, as Rom. & Jas. I, ii, 56, and Loy's Lab. Lat., IV, ii, 84. The omission of 'I before such words as 'pray' is not a parallel case. [Compare the owl . . . Which gives the stern'st good-night,' Macb. II, ii, 3.—Ed.]

19. A piece] Warburton: He says this as he gives his hand [to this effect Warburton inserted a stage-direction]. Heath and Steevens: It is merely a humorous, cant expression. Tschirschwitz: The philosophic Horatio conceives the personality of man, in its outward manifestation merely, as only a piece of himself. Molke: It is not without significance that Sh. makes Horatio return a different answer to this question than did Bernardo. The latter by his reply of He implies that he is present body and soul (for he and Marcellus have no longer any doubt; they have already seen the apparition with their own eyes); whereas Horatio by his answer implies that owing to his incredulity he is not wholly present, that he is not there with his body and soul, but that he had undertaken to share the watch with the corporeal part only of his entire individuality. Morery: As we say, 'something like him.'

21. Whether this should be spoken by Mar. or Hor. has occasioned discussion. Capell (i, 122) asks, 'Can it be imagined that the same person, who, but a line or two after, calls the apparition 'this dreaded sight,' should, in this line, call it 'this thing'?' The levity of the expression, and the question itself, are suited to the unbelieving but eager Hor.' Collier gives it to Hor., because Hor. had come purposely to inquire about the Ghost. Tschirschwitz: Mar. is a firm believer in the Ghost, and the allusion to it as a 'thing' betokening contempt and doubt can come only from the skeptic, Hor. Hudson: There is a temperate skepticism well befitting a scholar in this speech of Horatio's. On the other hand, Elze advocates Mar. 'Horatio, being the invited guest, remains in the background, attentive and expectant, while Marcellus is more forward in his zeal to convince Horatio of the truth of his story.' White: Horatio does not yet believe that the Ghost appeared at all.

21 again] Coleridge (p. 149): Even the word again has its credibilism.

23. fantasy CLARRENDON: Both this word and 'fancy' are commonly used by Sh. in the sense of imagination. The former is, however, found in the modern sense of whim, caprice in Oth. III, iii, 299.
25. dreaded] FRANCIS: Conf. 1 Hen. VI: IV, v, 8, 'unavoided danger.' 26. along] ABBOTT, § 30: Perhaps we ought (to the advantage of the rhythm) to place a comma after 'along.' 33. is as if 'let us tell you' had been used instead of 'let us assail your ears.' It is an instance of what the Greek grammarians called αἴρομαι ποιεῖν τά ειμασθήκαστα. But we may omit the comma, and take 'what . . . seen' as an exegesis of 'story.'

[See Abbott, § 252.]

33. sit we] Abbott, § 361, considers this so-called imperative in the first person plural as the subjunctive, i.e., 'suppose we sit down?' 'what if we sit down?' Compare 'Break we our watch up,' line 165 of this scene.

35. Coleridge: In the deep feeling which Ber. has of the solemn nature of what he is about to relate, he makes an effort to master his own imaginative terror by an elevation of style,—itself a continuation of the effort,—by turning off from the apar tion, as from something which would force him too deeply into himself, to the outward objects, the realities of nature, which had accompanied it. This passage seems to contradict the critical law that what is told makes a faint impression com pared with what is beheld; for it does indeed convey to the mind more than the eye can see; whilst the interruption of the narrative at the very moment when we are most intensely listening for the sequel, and have our thoughts diverted from the dreaded sight in expectation of the desired, yet almost dreaded, tale,—this gives all the suddenness and surprise of the original appearance.

36. star] Clarke: Nothing more natural than for a sentinel to watch the course of a particular star while on his lonely midnight watch; and what a radiance of poetry is shed on the passage by the casual allusion!

Huygens: Of course the north star is meant, which appears to stand still while the other stars in its neighborhood seem to revolve around it.

37. illumine] Clarke: Not used elsewhere by Sh.
39. beating] Staunton: 'Tolling' of Qq perhaps imparts additional solemnity to this impressive preparation for the appearance of the spectre.

41-44. Coleridge: Note the judgement displayed in having the two persons present, who, as having seen the Ghost before, are naturally eager in confirming their former opinions,—whilst the skeptic is silent, and, after having been twice addressed by his friends, answers with two hasty syllables,—Most like,—and a confession of horror. O heaven! words are wasted on those who feel, and to those who do not feel, the exquisite judgment of Sh. in this scene, what can be said? Hume himself could not but have had faith in this Ghost dramatically, let his anti-ghostism have been as strong as Samson against other ghosts less powerfully raised.

42. scholar] Douce: Exorcisms were performed in Latin, and therefore only by scholars. Reed: Thus Toby in Beau. and Fl.'s Night Walker II, i.—Let's call the butler up, for he speaks Latin, and that would daunt the devil.' In like manner the honest butler in Addison’s Drummer recommends the steward to speak Latin to the ghost in that play. Tschirschwitz: Evil spirits were not exorcised by the sign of the cross alone, but cried out to the exorciser the Latin hexameter Sigma te sigma, semere me tangis et angis, a verse which being a palindrome reveals its diabolic origin. Molte: See Much Ado II, i, 264: 'I would to God some scholar would conjure her.'

44. harrows] Steevens: Compare Milton: 'Amazed I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.—Comus, 565. Caldecott: It is natural that the surprise and terror of the speaker should bear some proportion to the degree of his former confidence and incredulity. Clarke: Horatio's previous levity makes his subsequent awe and trembling, and paleness seem like the effects of our own awe-stricken imaginations. Wedgwood: Harrow! a cry of distress; Old French, harrc! harau! Crier harrow, to make hue and cry after. Bohem. hr! hrr! interjection of excitement (frenzies), hurrah! Old High German, harom, to cry out. A harrowing sight is one which leads to the exclamation harrow!

Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As thou art to thyself;

Such was the very armour he had on

He smote the sledded Polacks on the ice.

identical, meaning ‘conference,’ with a view to a peaceful settlement of differences.

63. sleded Polack] German commentators have found more difficulty in this phrase than the English. TIECK supposes (and so translates) that the king ‘dashed his sliding Pole axe on the ice.’ ’Sleded,’ he adds, ‘according to a license frequent in Sh., stands for “sledding,” which Tieck mistook for “sliding.’ The folly of this interpretation and its errors were exposed by DELIUS. But the spelling of the Qq steated, and the lack of a capital P in pollax, together with its Roman letters (proper names in the old copies being usually printed in Italics), still presented inexplicable difficulties. FRIESEN inclined to Tieck, believing it more conceivable that the king dashed down on the ice his steated battle-axe (whatever that might be) than that he struck an enemy or smote him to the ground, for in this case the king’s visor would have been down, and Horatio could not have seen the frown on his face.’ Wherefore, he concludes, there is greater likelihood of finding verbal obscurities in Sh.’s text than downright nonsense. ELZE and DELIUS follow the English commentators, and scout the idea of ‘poleaxe.’ The former follows Pope, on the ground that Polack is generally found in the singular, and refers to the Polish king, just as ‘the Dane’ is used in line 15 of this scene. TSCHISCHWITZ also follows Pope, because the plural Polacks would signify the whole Polish army, and it would be monstrous to suppose that the whole army could travel in sleighs; the ‘sleded Polack’ is therefore merely the Polish king, who, and who alone, had come to the conference on a sled. If the word ‘Poleaxe’ be adopted, insuperable difficulties attend the interpretation of ‘sleded.’ If it mean sliged, it refers to a battle-axe, to which a war-club (Old North German steggja) has been added, and the words ‘on the ice’ are used instead of the more natural phrase on the ground to indicate that the parle took place on some frozen neutral river. LEO (Notes and Queries, November 19, 1864):tie always regarded ‘sleaded,’ or, as the modern editors read, ‘sleded,’ as nonsense. What a ridiculous position it must have been to see a king, in full armour, sitting down a sleded man, i. e. a man sitting in a sledge! It would rather not have been a king-like action. And it was, of course, not a remarkable, not a memorable, fact, that in the cold Scandinavian country in winter-time, people were found sitting in a sledge; nobody would have wondered at it,—perhaps more at the contrary. When the king frowned in an angry parle he must have been provoked to it by an irritating behaviour of the adversary, and Horatio, remembering the fact, will also bear in mind the cause of it, and so, I suppose, he used an epithet which points out the provoking manner of the Polack; and, following as much as possible the form “sleaded,” I should like to propose the word sturdy, or, as it would have been written in Shakespeare’s time, sturdy! MOLTKE believes that he has discovered the correct reading on aesthetic as well as philological grounds; Sh. wishes to portray to us the character of the deceased king, which must be full of
Mar. Thus twice before, and jump at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work I know not;

grandeur and dignity. Such rage as Tieck’s interpretation implies would be most unseemly; besides, by dashing down his poleaxe, he would disarm himself, which would be silly. The idea, therefore, conveyed by the word ‘smite’ must be personal to the king; it must be some gesture, not a blow delivered on an enemy. What, therefore, more natural than that he should strike his Poleaxe violently on the ice, just as any honest citizen is wont by way of emphasis to strike his fist on the table?

“Sledded” is a sophistication of the printers, and the correct text is his loaded pole-axe, i.e. his poleaxe loaded with lead; or his edged poleaxe, i.e. sharpened; or, for aught to the contrary, his sledged poleaxe. This emendation of Molkte’s CLARENDON pronounces an anticlimax; Sh. having mentioned ‘Norway’ in the first clause would certainly have told us with whom the ‘angry parle’ was held. Curiously enough, this emendation of Molkte’s has been anticipated not by a German, but by an Englishman. In the Athenaeum, 3d April, 1875, C. ELIOT BROWNE gives some notes on Hamlet by the Earl of Rochester, 1761, and on the present passage is the following: ‘Sledded agrees with an axe, but not with a man; and signifies loaded with lead... The king was then in an angry parle (which can’t signify fighting), and because he could not have his will most furiously struck his loaded or heavy battle-axe into the ice.’ JOHNSON: ‘Polack’ is the name of an inhabitant of Poland. Polaxe is French. As in Davison’s translation of Passeratius’s Epistle on Henry III of France, published by Camden: ‘This little stone a great king’s heart doth hold, Who ruled the sickle French and Polacks bold.’ MALONE: The corrupted form in the Q3 shows that Sh. wrote ‘Polacks.’ Since, as DYCE adds, the singular is afterwards spelled in this play ‘Polacke,’ ‘Pollacke,’ ‘Poleak,’ ‘Polock,’ and ‘Polake.’ STEVENS preferred the singular, because we cannot well suppose that in a parley the king belaboured many, as it is not likely that provocation was given by more than one, or that on such an occasion he would have condescended to strike a meaner person than a prince. BOSWELL: May not Polack be put for the person who carried the pole-axe, a mark of rank,—as we should talk at the present day ‘of the gold stick in waiting.’ He sent a great and glorious duke, one of them that held the golden pole-axe, with his retinue,’ &c.—Milton’s Brief Hist. of Moscovia.

sequently denies Barrington’s conclusion, by affirming that press-money was given to soldiers when they were retained in the king’s service, and that it merely indicated that they were to hold themselves, at all times, in readiness to serve. The term is taken from the French ‘prest,’ ready, and is so written in Henry VII’s Book of Household Expenses. The word is here used in its ordinary signification, as shown by the Concordance. Lord Campbell (p. 103): Such confidence has there been in Shakespeare’s accuracy, that this passage has been quoted both by text-writers and by judges on the bench as an authority upon the legality of the press-gang, and upon the debated question whether shipwrights, as well as common seamen, are liable to be pressed into the service of the royal navy. Tschirschwitz, however, will not tolerate the idea of impressment, which he says is an injustice of wholly modern

82. Fortinbras] Latham (Athenaeum, 27 July, 1872) shows that this is a corrupt French form, equivalent to Fierarbus or Fierabras, which is a derivative from ferri brachium: by translating brachium, side, we have Ironside, or, in Icelandic, Ivarsha, a name actually applied to one of the old Norse Sea-kings. All that the learned critic contends for is that such names are in some small sense historical, i.e. that they have their origin in distorted history, rather than in arbitrary fiction.

84. the] Abbott, § 92: i.e. the combat that ends all dispute. Or see Mack. V, ii, 4.

85. compact] Clarndon: Always, whether substantive or adjective, accepted by Sh. on the last syllable, except in 1 Hen. IV. iv, 163. For lists of words with accents differing from present use, see Abbott, §§ 490-492. Else refers to the compact made between Collere and Horvendie in The Histories of Hamlet, Appendix, Vol. II, p. 92.

86. Law and heraldry] Capell (i, 123): The forms of both the common law and the law of arms having been duly observed. Stevens erroneously cites Upton as giving this phrase as an instance of healdy, meaning the heraldic law, which it may be possibly (though I doubt it; CLARENDON says it is 'a kind of hendiadys'), but the only example Upton gives from Sh. is from Ant. & Cleop. IV, ii, 44. MOBERLY: Law would be wanted to draw up accurately the contract, heraldry to give it a binding force in honour; as the court of chivalry 'has cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms or of war out of the realm.'

91. return'd] EARL OF ROCHESTER (1761, Athenæum, 3 April, 1875): These lands could have no return, that had never been turned or moved from the primitive owner. Read, cnur'd.
92. covenant] MALONE, DYCE: Co-mart of the Qq is a joint bargain, a word of Shakespeare's coinage. A mart signifying a great fair or market; he would not have scrupled to have written to mart, in the sense of to make a bargain. STEEVENS: He has not scrupled so to write in Gym. I, vi, 151. WHITE: Co-mart is a singular phrase, which implies a trading purpose not well suited to a royal combat for a province. HEATH, HUNTER and BAILEY prefer compact. ABBOTT, § 494: One of these syllables is slurred; see 'funeral,' I, ii, 176.
94. carriage] JOHNSON: That is, the import of the article formed or drawn up between them. WHITE: In F, an s after 'article' seems manifestly omitted. The meaning is the carrying out of the design of the articles between the two kings.
96. unimproved] JOHNSON's definition of this word as 'not regulated or guided by knowledge or experience' is denied by GIFFORD, who says that it means just the contrary. See note on reprove (in Every Man in his Humour, III, ii, p. 88), which Hath in the skirts of Norway here and there
Shark’d up a list of lawless resolutelys,
For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach in’t; which is no other—
As it doth well appear unto our state—
But to recover of us, by strong hand
And terms compulsative, those foresaid lands

has the same sense as improve. This last word Nares defines by ‘to reprove or refuse; as from improb, Latin.’ Singer (ed. 1) cites Florio: ‘Improbar, to improve, to impugn,’ hence ‘unimproved’ means unimpeached, unquestioned. In his ed. 2, Singer adopted Q7 as the idea excited by young Fortinbras is of one animated by courage at full heat, but at present untried—the ardour of inexperience.’ STAUNTON apprehends that insatiable, ungovernable is meant, as in Chapman, Iliad, Book xi,—the King still crieth, Pursue, pursue, And all his unapprov’d hands did blood and dust embrace.’ Dyck follows Gifford, and CLARENDON inclines to the definition of Singer (ed. 2), untutored.

98. Shark’d] Steevens: Picked up without distinction, as the shark-fish collects his prey. Nares: Collected in a banditti-like manner. The verb to shark is nearly equivalent to the modern verb to swindle.

98. list] Hunter [ii, 214]: Sight of q, though now accounted a vulgarism, is here the better word.

98. lawless] Tschischwitz: The reading of the Ff is certainly the better; had ‘lawless’ been meant, the more usual word outlaw would have been used. No young noble warrior like Fortinbras would have made common cause with outlaws, but with the landless the case was different; indeed, he himself belonged to that category.

98. resolutely] For infected participles and adjectives, see Abbott, § 433; and Macb. i, ii, 60, ‘Norway’s king.’

99. food and diet] Theobald (Nichols, Lit. Hist. ii, 558): Is not ‘food and diet’ a mere tautology? Read, ‘For food; and dictated to some,’ &c., &c. trained up. [This was not repeated in his edition. Ed.] Moberly: For no pay but their keep. Being landless, they have nothing to lose, and the war would at the worst feed them.

100. stomach] Johnson: Constancy, resolution. Dyce: Stubborn resolution or courage. Caldecott: The redundancy of ‘food and diet’ may have been employed for the purpose of fixing in the mind the continuation of the metaphor in the use of the word ‘stomach,’ here put in an equivocal sense, importing both courage and appetite. The same play on the word is in Two Gent. i, ii, 68.

101. state] Delius: This does not in Sh. refer merely to geographical limits, but to the government.

1. Rummage, the proper stowing of merchandise in a ship; from Du. rwim, Fr. rum, the hold of a ship. Hence torummage, to search among the things stored in a given receptacle. 2. But in addition to the foregoing the word is sometimes used in the sense of racket, disturbance [as here in Hamlet]. In this sense it may be a parallel form with rumfus. CALDECOTT connects it with 'Rommyngs, privy mysteryngs. Ruminacio, mussitacio.'—Prompt. Parv.

108—125. KNIGHT explains the omission of these lines in the Ff on the ground that Shakespeare probably suppressed this magnificent description of the omens which preceded the fall of 'the mightiest Julius' after he had written Jul. Cas. HUNTER (ii, 214): I wonder that the commentators should have overlooked so obvious an origin of this passage as Lucan's description (Pharsalia, lib. i) of the prodigies which preceded the death of Caesar. We have the tenantless graves, the sheeted dead seen on the streets, the stars with trains of fire, and the moon's eclipse. It is of little moment to ask if Lucan had been translated when Sh. wrote Hamlet. The earliest published translation, I believe, is that by Sir Arthur Gorges, 1614.

108. be] ABBOTT, § 299: As a rule it will be found that be is used with some notion of doubt, question, thought, &c.; 1, in questions, as in III, ii, 100; V, i, 94; and 2, after verbs of thinking, as in the present case. Very significant is this difference in 'I think my wife be honest, and think she is not,' Oth. III, iii, 384.

109. sort] JOHNSON: The cause and effect are proportionate and suitable.

112. mote] MALONE (King John, IV, i, 92): The modern spelling of moth.

ditions,] is a ninefold Murderer! He murders the Phrase; he murders the Speech;

Play; he murders Rome; he murders Shakespeare; and he murders Me.'

114. mightiest] ABBOTT, § 8: The superlative, like the Latin usage, sometimes signifies very, with little or no idea of excess.

116. JENNINGS: Perhaps a line has been omitted here, by mistake, somewhat like the following: 'Tremendous prodigies in heav'n appear'd.' HUNTER (ii, 2, 15) suggests, 'In the heavens above strange portents did appear.'

117, 118. MALONE: When Sh. had told us that the 'graves stood tenantless,' &c., which are wonders confined to the earth, he naturally proceeded to say (in the line now lost) that yet other prodigies appeared in the sky; and the phenomena he exemplified by adding, 'As [i.e. for instance] stars with trains,' &c. I suspect that the words 'As stars' are a corruption, and that the lost words, as suggested by the passage in Jul. Cas. II, ii, which describes the prodigies preceding his death, contained a description of 'fery warriors fighting in the clouds,' or of 'brands burning bright beneath the stars.' What makes me believe that the corruption lies in 'As stars' is the disagreeable recurrence of 'stars' in the next line. Perhaps Sh. wrote:
Astres with trains of fire—and dews of blood Disastrous dimm'd the sun! 'Astre' is an old word for star; see Diana, a collection of poems, printed circa 1580. [See also Florio, 'Stella: a starre, an aster, a planet.' Ed.] KIGHT rather favors Malone's emendation, and thinks that it gets rid of the difficulty. CALDECOTT finds no difficulty in conceiving the meaning of the passage as it stands, reading or understanding it thus: 'The graves opened, the dead were seen abroad [spectacles such] as,' &c. MITFORD (Gent. Mag., Feb. 1845): This line has merely got out of its place; there is nothing wanting. Transpose it to follow line 121, and read, 'As stars with . . . . . . . blood, Astre harbingers preceding,' &c. A. E. B [RAE] (N. & Qu., 24 Jan. 1852): It is only by the occurrence of such difficulties as the present, which, after remaining so long obscure, are at last only resolvable by presupposing in Sh. a depth of knowledge far exceeding that of his trifiers, that his wonderful and almost mysterious attainments are beginning to be appreciated.
In the present case he must not only have known that the fundamental meaning of aster is a spot of light, but he must also have taken into consideration the power of dis in producing an absolute reversal in the meaning of the word to which it may be prefixed. Thus, service is a benefit, disservice is an injury, while unservice (did Disasters in the sun; and the moist star,

such a word exist) would be a negative mean between the two extremes. Similarly, if aster signify a spot of light, a name singularly appropriate to a comet, disaster must, by reversal, be a spot of darkness, and 'disasters in the sun' no other than what we should call spots upon his disk. Read, therefore, 'Asters with trains of fire,' &c. SINGER (ed. 2): As it has been conjectured that a line has been here lost, perhaps we might read: 'And as the earth, so portents fill'd the sky, Asteris, with trains of fire,' &c. Disaster is used as a verb in Ant. & Cleop. II, vii, 18, and it has therefore been conjectured that we should read Disastering here. COLLIER thinks that these lines are probably irretrievably corrupt, but that there is no sufficient reason for supposing a line to have been lost, adding, 'We shrewdly suspect that the error lies merely in the word "Disasters," which was perhaps misprinted, because it was immediately below "As stars," and thus misled the eye of the old compositor. We do not imagine that Sh. used so affected and unpopular a word as aster or asteris.' W. W. WILLIAMS proposes: 'Asteris with trains of fire and dews of blood, Did overcast the sun,' &c. STAUTON awards some plausibility to Malone's emendation, and considers Aster or Asteris as an acceptable conjecture, but conceives, with COLLIER, that the cardinal error lies in 'Disasters,' which conceals some verb importing the obscuration of the sun; for example, 'Asteris with trains of fire and dews of blood Distempered the sun,' or 'Discoloured the sun.' DYCRO pronounces the passage hopelessly mutilated, and in his 2d ed. terms Leo's alterations 'most wretched,' and also gives a MS. emendation by BOADEN, supplying the missing line thus: 'The Heavens, too, spoke in silent prodigies; As, stars,' &c. WHITE says that a preceding line, or even more than one, has been lost. CLARKE: Bearing in mind that Sh. uses 'as' many times with markedly elliptical force, and in passages of very peculiar construction, we do not feel so sure that the present one has suffered from omission. It may be that the sentence is to be understood, 'As there were stars of fire, &c., so there were disasters in the sun,' &c. FABIUS OXONIENSIS (N. & Qu., 7 Jan. 1865): Read, 'As stars (i.e. while stars) . . . or, 'And stars . . . Disastrous dimm'd the sun.' DUANE (N. & Qu., 3d S. viii, 30 Sept. '65): 'I am convinced Sh. wrote, 'Did usher in the sun.' This makes sense of the whole passage; it is metrical, and it produces a line in analogy with the line 'did speak' and gibber. The words did usher might be readily mistaken for 'Disasters,' and the composer's eye may have caught the word 'stars' in the line above. KEIGHTLEY (Expositor): Perhaps for 'disasters' we might read distemper: 'distemperatures of the sun,'— 1 Hen. IV: V, i. MASSEY (The Secret Drama of Shakespeare's Sonnets, ed. ii, 1872, Supplement, p. 46) inserts lines 121-125 between lines 116 and 117, and asserts that 'it must be admitted that we recover the perfect sense of the passage by this insertion.' There is no eclipse of either sun or moon mentioned in Jul. Caes., and its mention here, Massey infers, must point to some actual, recent instance. The Astronomer Royal, being applied to, replied by showing that there was an eclipse of the moon on 20 February, 1598, and one of the sun, almost total, on 6 March following. Hence Massey infers that this year is the date of the composition of Hamlet, and that in this passage Sh. pointed, by the eclipse of the moon, to the death or deposition of Queen Elizabeth, who had an attack of 'special sickness at the time.' Moreover, 'disasters in the sun,' MASSEY thinks, might have been 'sun-spots' which Sh,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse:
And even the like precurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates

'T noted,' and so 'pluralized [sic] the phenomenon. ' Moxerly agrees with Malone in supplying the missing line from the corresponding passage in Jut. Cat., if a line be really lost. Clarendon: Sh. had probably in his mind the passage in North's Plutarch, Jut. Cat. p. 739 (ed. 1631): 'Certainly, destinie may easier be foreseene then aizado, considering the strange and wonderfull signs that were said to be seene before Caesar's death. For, touching the fires in the element, and spirits running vp and downe it. the night, and also the solitary birds to be seene at noon daies sitting in the great market place, are not all these signes perhaps worth the noting, in such a wonderfull chance as happened? ' Plutarch also relates that a comet appeared after Caesar's death for seven nights in succession, and then was seen no more, that the sun was darkened and the earth brought forth raw and unripe fruit.

121. precurse] Clarendon: Only found here in Sh., though he uses 'precurre' (Phen. & Tur. 6), and 'precursor' (Temp. I, ii, 201). It includes everything that preceded and foreshadowed the fierce events that followed.

121. fierce] Warburton explains this as terrible; Steevens, as conspicuous, glaring, and cites in proof Timon, IV, ii, 30; Hen. VIII: I, i, 54; Caldecott, bloody and terrible, as elsewhere it means extreme, excessive, citing King John, V, vii, 13, and Jonson's Sejanus, V, x (p. 140, ed. Gifford), 'O most tame slavery, and fierce flattery,'

122. still] Constantly, always. See II, i, ii, iv, 42; Rom. & Jut. II, ii, 172, 174; V, iii, 106; Macb. V, viii, 16; and Abbott, § 69.
123. omen] Theobald: 'Prologue' and 'omen' are synonymous, whereas Sh. means that these phenomena are forerunners of the events presaged by them, and such sense the addition of a single letter gives. Upton says that the 'omen' is the event itself, which happened in consequence of the omens, and cites Virgil, Æm. i, 349. Heath expressed the same idea in the phraseology of a grammarian: 'Omen,' by metonymy of the antecedent for the consequent, is here put for the event predicted by the omen. Farmer appositely cited a distich from Heywood's Life of Merlin: 'Merlin, well vers'd in many a hidden spell, His countries omen did long since foretell.'
124. demonstrated] Delius: This word is accented on the first syllable also in Hen. V: IV, ii, 54.

125. climatures] Clarendon: Possibly used for those who live under the same climate. Otherwise it would be better to read 'climature' with Dyce. The French climature appears to be a modern word in that language, for it is not found in Cotgrave, and Littre gives no early example of its use.

127. White: The stage direction of the Q2 may be a misprint for 'He spreads,' &c., indicating Horatio's action in his attempt to stay the Ghost. 'His might,' of course, refer to the Ghost through 'it'; but there seems to be no occasion for the Ghost to make such a gesture.

127. cross] Blake-way: Whoever crossed the spot on which a spectre was seen became subject to its malignant influence. Among the reasons for supposing the Earl of Derby (who died 1594) to have been bewitched is the following: 'On Friday there appeared a tall man who twice crossed him swiftly; and when the Earl came to the place where he saw this man, he first fell sick.'—Lodge's Illustrations of British History, vol. iii, p. 48.

134. happily] Nares and Clarendon consider this as equivalent to happily; Tschirschwitz and Hudson, as equivalent to luckily. The latter says: 'Which happy or fortunate foreknowledge may avoid:' a participle and adverb used in the sense of a substantive and adjective. The structure of this solemn appeal is almost identical with that of a very different strain in At You Like It, II, iv, 33-42.

138. _they say_ CLARKE: There is great propriety in the use of these words in the mouth of Horatio, the scholar and the unbeliever in ghosts.

138. _spirits_ For the monosyllabic pronunciation of this word, see WALKER (Crit. i, 193, 205), quoted in Macb. IV, i, 127. Also ABBOTT, § 463; and I, i, 161.

139. _Cock crows_ DYCE ( Few Notes, &c., p. 134): The cock used to crow when Garrick acted Hamlet, and, perhaps, also when that part was played by some of his successors; but now-a-days managers have done wisely in striking the cock from the list of the Dramatis Personae. MITFORD (Cursory Notes, &c., p. 43): It is said in the life of one of the actors, I think of George Cooke, that on one occasion not fewer than six cocks were collected in order to summon the spirit to his diurnal residence, lest one cock, like one single clock, might not keep time exactly, when the matter was of importance.

139, 141. STEEVENS is unwilling to believe that the speeches 'Stop it, Marcellus,' and 'Do, if it will not stand,' are correctly given to Horatio, who, as a scholar, must have known the folly of attempting to commit any act of violence on a shadow; he therefore proposes to give them to Bernardo, whose first impulse, as an unlettered officer, would be to strike at what offends him. 'The next two speeches, "'Tis here!' "'Tis here!' should be allotted to Mar. and Ber., and the third, "'Tis gone!" to Hor. As the text now stands, Mar. proposes to strike the Ghost with his partisan, and yet, afterwards, is made to descan to the indecorum and impotence of such an attempt.

140. _partisan_ See Rom. & _Jul._ I, i, 66.

141, 142. _Do ... gone!_ WALKER (Crit. iii, 261): To avoid the broken line; 'Tis gone!' which _here_ seems to me irregular, arrange 'Do' as belonging to line 140, reading 'If 't will not ... gone!' as one line.

150. cock] FARMER: Bourne of Newcastle, in his Antiquities of the Common People, informs us: 'It is a received tradition among the vulgar, that at the time of cock-crowing the midnight spirits forsake these lower regions and go to their proper places. Hence it is that in country places, where the way of life requires more early labour, they always go cheerfully to work at that time.' And he quotes some lines from the first hymn of Prudentius, Ad Gallicinimum: 'Ferunt, vagantes daemonas, Latos tenebris noctium, Gallo canente exteritos Sparsim timere, et cedere. Hoc esse signum prescii Norunt repromisse spei, Qua nos soporis liberi Speramus adventum Dei.' DOUCE quotes from another hymn, said to have been composed by Saint Ambrose, and formerly used in the Salisbury service: 'It contains the following lines, which so much resemble the speech of Hor. that one might almost suppose Sh. to have seen them: "Preco diei jam sonat, Noctis profundae pervigil; Nocturna lux viantibus, A nocte noctem segregans. Hoc excitatus Lucifer Solvit polum caligine; Hoc omnis errorum chorus Viam nocendi deserti, Gallo canente spes redit,"' &c. STEEVENS: Philostratus, giving an account of the appariition of Achilles's shade to Apollonius Tyaneus, says that it vanished with a little glimmer as soon as the cock crowed.—Vit. Apol. iv, 16. COLERIDGE: No Addison could be more careful to be poetical in diction than Sh. in providing grounds and sources of its propriety. But how to elevate a thing almost mean by its familiarity, young poets may learn in this treatment of the cock-crow.

153. sea] JOHNSON: According to the pneumatology of that time, every element was inhabited by its peculiar order of spirits. The meaning therefore is, that all spirits extravagan[t], wandering out of their element, whether aerial spirits visiting earth, or earthly spirits ranging the air, return to their station, to their proper limits, in which they are confined. We might read:—'at his warning Th' extravagan[t] and erring spirit hies To his confine, whether in sea, or air, Or earth, or fire. And of,' &c. But change is unnecessary.

154. extravagan[t] STEEVENS: Thus, '—they took me up for a 'stravagan[t].'—Nobody and Somebody, 1598. The same effect is given to 'Aurora's harbinger' in Mid. N. D. III, ii, 381. CLARENDON cites Oth. I, i, 137.

   Ed.]

163. *takes] Dyce: To bewitch, to affect with malignant influence, to strike with disease. See Merry Wives, IV, iv, 32. CLARENDON: The adjective 'taking,' for infectious, occurs in Lear, II, iv, 160. And 'taking,' as a substantive in the sense of infection, is found in Lear, III, iv, 58.

164. *gracious] CALDECOTT: Partaking of the nature of the epithet with which it is associated, with 'blessedness,' participating in a heavenly quality, of grace in its scriptural sense; not in the sense in which it is used in King John, III, iv, 81.
Frequently, in Sh., it does not mean, as has been interpreted, graceful, elegant, winning, pleasing simply, but touched with something holy, instinct with goodness.

165. *in part believe] CLARKE: This assent of Howatio's to so imaginative a creed is peculiarly appropriate, coming, as it does, immediately upon a supernatural appearance, when his mind is softened to impressions, and is prepared to admit the possible bility of spiritual wonders. MOBERLY: A happy expression of the half-sceptical, half-compelling spirit of Shakespeare's time, when witchcraft was believed, antipodes doubted.

166, 167. HUNTER (ii, 216): It must have been in emulation of these lines that Milton wrote, 'Now morn her rosy steps in th' eastern clime Advancing, sowed the dearth with orient pearls.'—Par. Lost, v, 1. We have the same characteristics of morning in both. 'Russet,' rosy; 'eastern hill,' eastern clime; 'the dew,' orient pearls.

167. *eastern] WARBURTON pronounced in favor of eastward. STEEVES denied its superiority, and cited, '—Ulysses still An eye directed to the eastern hill.'— Chapman's Odyssey, lib. xiii. STAUNTON prefers 'eastern' as more in accordance with the poetical phraseology of the period. Thus Spenser charmingly uthers in the morn, '—cheerful Chaunticleere with his note shrill Had warned once, that Phorbas' fiery Car In haste was climbing up the Eastern Hill, Full envious 'hat Night so long his room did fill.'

170. _Hamlet_ [Coleridge (p. 151): Note the unobtrusive and yet fully adequate mode of introducing the main character, ‘young Hamlet,’ upon whom is transferred all the interest excited for the acts and concerns of the king his father.

171. _dumb_ Tschischwitz quotes from Simrock (p. 488) that only those persons have any influence over spirits, who are themselves guileless, such as Priests, young scholars, &c. This essential qualification Horatio attributes to Hamlet.

173. _loves_ Clarendon [Note on Rich. II: IV, i. 315]: The plural is frequently used by Sh. and writers of the 16th and 17th centuries when designating an attribute common to many, in cases where it would now be considered a solecism. Thus: ‘sights,’ Lear, IV, vi, 35; Rich. III: IV, i, 25; Timon, I, i. 255; Pericles, I, i, 74; ‘so loves,’ ‘consents,’ Two Gent. I, iii. 48, 49; ‘wills’ in Hen. VII: III, i, 68; see also Ham. I, ii. 14, 250, 253; II, ii. 14; IV, vii, 30; Much. III, iv, 121.

173. _duty_ Hudson: These last three speeches are admirably conceived. The speakers are in a highly kindled state: when the Ghost vanishes, their terror presently subsides into an inspiration of the finest quality, and their intense excitement, as it passes off, blazes up in a subdued and pious rapture of poetry.

Scene II.] Coleridge: The audience are now relieved by a change of scene to the royal court, in order that Ham. may not have to take up the leavings of extraction. In the king’s speech, observe the set and pedantically antithetic form of the sentences when touching that which galled the heels of conscience,—the strain of undignified rhetoric,—and yet in what follows concerning the public weal, a certain appropriate majesty. Indeed was he not a royal brother?
The memory be green, and that it us befitted
To bear our hearts in grief and our whole kingdom
To be contracted in one brow of woe,
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature
That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.
Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere with a defeated joy,—
With one auspicious and one dropping eye,
With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage,

2. that] TSCHISCHWITZ: The simpler form 'that' was used instead of the fuller form 'though that,' just as in French after quodque subordinate clauses are introduced by quod. [See also ABOTT, § 284.]
2. befitted] STEEVENS: Perhaps Sh. elliptically wrote 'and us befitted,' i.e. 'and what it befitted us.' SKEMOUTH (ii, 141): Read, 'The memory's green; and it befitted us.' The greenness of the memory is not hypothetric, but real, and the proper mood of the verb could not be mistaken, if, for 'though,' we substitute as.
4. woe] CLARENDON: Mourning brow. See Love's Lab. Lost, V, ii, 754; 'the mourning brow of progeny.' For similar phrases, see IV, vi, 19; Lear, I, iv, 306, 'brow of youth' = youthful brow; Mer. of Ven. II, viii, 42, 'mind of love'— loving mind; and 1 Hen. IV. IV, iii, 83, 'brow of justice.'
11. auspicious...dropping] STEEVENS: See the same thought in Wint. Tale, V, ii, 80. It is only the ancient proverbial phrase, 'To cry with one eye and laugh with the other.' MALONE says that dropping may mean depressed or cast down; there could be little hesitation in rejecting this interpretation had not WHITE so far accepted it as to substitute in the text dropping in place of 'dropping,' considering, he says, 'the sense required, the distinction made between "drop" and "droop" in Shakespeare's day as in our own, and remembering how common an error is the reduplication of the wrong letter in both type-setting and chirography.' FRANCKE refers to the Homeric phrase, δουκοδεις γεικόνων, Iliad, vi, 484, and to Odyssey, xix, 12. mirth...dirge] MORELLI: The studied antitheses repeated over and over in this speech give it a very artificial appearance. The king's politic and parliamentary reasons for marrying the queen remind us of the similar motives which an eminent writer supposes to have influenced Henry VIII in his prompt remarriages.

hing so harsh and obscure as this. Point, 'Now follows that you know; young

21. Colleagued] From the definition of the word 'Collogue, biandvitiis tentare,' given by Skinner, Theobald suggested colleague, that is, 'he being flattered, impos-on, cou'l d' by the dream of his Advantage;' he, however, did not adopt it in his text, but Hanmer did. See Abbott, p. 16, 'Colleagued' for Co-leagued.

epitrope indicating the plural.] See also Abbott, § 471.

33. bed-rid] CLARENDON: Earle gives the following doubtful, but ingenious etymology of this word: 'The Saxons called a sorcerer 'dry:'...out of this word was made, ‘be-drian,' to bewitch or fascinate. . . . The participle of this verb, ‘be-drida,' a disordered man, has, by a false light of cross analogy, generated the modern “bed-riden,” a half-sister of “hag-riden.”' (Philology of the English Language, p. 22.) The etymology commonly given explains it of one who is carried or rides on a bed. 'Bed-rid' occurs in Wint. Tale, IV, iv, 412. MOBERLY: If Hart-le's derivation be rejected, and the connection with ride still assumed, we must pose that from the idea of a 'ridden' or trained horse comes the more general of 'accustomed to,' and hence 'perpetually on,' the bed. Compare the way which δόξη is used in Homer and Herodotus simply to mean 'a place' (rά Σιδερίω

38. allow.] Malone says Sh. should have written allows, and that many writers fall into this error, when a plural noun immediately precedes the verb. Steevens asserts that all such defects in Sh. were merely the errors of illiterate transcribers or printers. Caldecott boldly maintains that Sh. was fully justified, in cases like the present, by the usage of the best scholars and writers of the time, and gives instances from Queen Elizabeth's Seneca, and King James's Revis and Cautes and Scolds of Scottis Poesie, from Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, and Daniel's Apologie for Ryme; and, further, that this usage was proper because the ear abhors the cacophony of an accumulation of ss, more especially in poetry, whose province is to please the ear, not offend it. Knight says that the use of the plural verb with the nominative singular, a plural genitive intervening, can scarcely be detected as an error. 'The truth is, that it is only within the last half century that the construction of our language has attained that uniform precision which is now required. . . . It is remarkable that the very commentators, who were always ready to fix the charge of ignorance of the rudiments of grammar upon Sh., have admitted the following passage in a note to 2 Hen. IV by that elegant modern scholar, T. Warton: "Beaumont and Fletcher's play contains many satirical strokes against Heywood's comedy, the force of which are entirely lost to those who have not seen that comedy."' Elze ingeniously suggests that 'allow' may be in the subjunctive, and Tschischwitz roundly asserts that it is, 'because it is preceded by the idea of comparison implied by "than," which in Old English and Anglo-Saxon usually governed the subjunctive.' Abbott gives this as an instance of confusion of agreement by proximity (§ 412). For many instances (which Dyce with truth says might be multiplied without end) of apparent lack of agreement between the nominative and the verb, see Abbott, § 332 et seq.; Macb. II, i, 61, and Ham. III, ii, 194; III, iii, 14.

The head is not more native to the heart,

The hand more instrumental to the mouth,

Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.

similar cases, analogous to the Greek μηδεν, e.g. μηδεν δαντων μειραν ἐπιευχου Τοιαλε βασιλεις. Eschyl. Agam. [1384, ed. Klausen]. CLARENDON cites Twelfth Night, II, iii, 104; Cor. I, iii, 111.

44-45. you . . . thou] Abbott, § 235: The king, as he rises in his profession of affection to Laer., passes from you to thou, subsequently returning to you. [See Marv. V, iii, 37. Ed.]

42. Coleridge (p. 151): Thus with great art Sh. introduces a most important but still subordinate character, first, Laertes, who is yet thus graciously treated in consequence of the assistance given to the election of the late king's brother, instead of his son, by Polonius.

47. head] Warburton could not conceive what this line means; but after changing 'head' to blood he pronounced the sentiment just and pertinent, and the expression 'extremely fine. For the heart is the laboratory where,' &c. &c. HAMMER adopted the emendation. Heath (p. 523): There is not more natural affinity and strict connection between the head and heart, though the former contrives the means by which the purposes of the latter are executed. The king considers himself the heart and Polonius the head.

47. native] Strevens: The head is not formed to be more useful to the heart, the hand is not more at the service of the mouth, than my power is at your father's service. Caldecott: The principal parts of the body are not more natural, instrumental, or necessary to each other than is the throne natural to, and a machine acted upon and under the guidance of, your father. Delius: 'Native' expresses a connection that is congenital; 'instrumental,' one that is mechanical. CLARENDON refers to IV, vii, 181, and a similar sense of 'native' in All's Well, I, i, 238.

51. leave and favour] Caldecott: Your kind permission. Two substantives with a copula being here used for an adjective and substantive; an adjective sense is given to a substantive.

53. coronation] STAUNTON: As an instance of the minute attention with which the finished play was elaborated from the early sketch, it may be noteworthy that, in Q, the motive of Laertes's visit is said to be his desire to attend the late king's funeal. But it evidently occurred to Sh. that the acknowledgement of such an object was as little consistent with the character of Laertes as it would be palatable to the living monarch, and, accordingly, in the augmented piece the reason given by Laertes for his coming is more courtier-like.

50. pardon] CLARKEIN: Leave to depart. So in III, ii, 393. It is equivalent to 'leave' in (i. iv, 46, and 3 Hen. VII: IV, i, 87.

54. Polonius] WALKER (Exit. iii. 32): A critic who should suggest that 'Polonius' was a corruption of 'Poliooine' would perhaps 'make much laugh,' as Man Friday says; yet I know not that it is more strange than 'Laertes' and fifty other similar names in our old plays.

63. graces] CALDWELL: May the exercise of thy fairest virtues fill up thy time, which is wholly at thy command.

64. cousin] CLARKEIN: This word was used to denote 'uncle' and 'aunt,'
' nephew' and 'niece,' as well as in the modern sense. Compare Twelfth Night, I, in. 5, where it means 'niece,' and III, iv. 68, where it means 'uncle.'

64 and] WARDIN: suggested 'Ains my son,' or, as we now say, 'Good my son,' whereas, Warburton thinks, a pertinence is gained for Hamlet's reply, which is otherwise lacks.
Ham. [Aside] A little more than kin, and less than kind.

65. [Aside] The propriety of this 'aside,' which was first marked by Warburton, and has been adopted by every succeeding editor, is denied by MOLTKE for the following reasons: There is no other instance in Shakespeare's plays where the hero is first introduced with such a very brief soliloquy; secondly, no one plays upon words when speaking to one's self; thirdly, Sh. invariably strikes the keynote of his dramas at the very outset. In this instance, after having in the first scene made us take sides with Hamlet against the King, and after having still further fostered this feeling of sympathy for the one and dislike for the other by the King's hypocritical speech from the throne, it is of the utmost importance that this opposition between the two should be emphasized, and that Hamlet himself should be shown, not only as perfectly aware of it himself, but as equally determined that the King himself should be aware of it. All these objects fail if the speech be spoken aside.

65. kin, kind] HANMER: Probably a proverbial expression for a relationship so confused and blended that it was hard to define it. JOHNSON supposes 'kind' to be here the German word for child. That is, 'I am more than cousin and less than son.' This conjecture STEEVENS properly disposes of by requiring some proof that 'kind' was ever used by any English writer for child. He adds: A jingle of the same sort is found in Mother Bombie, 1594, 'the nearer we are in blood, the further we must be from love, the greater the kindred is, the less the kindness must be.' Again, in Gorboduc, 1561, 'In kind a father, but not kindelynesse.' As 'kind,' however, signifies nature, Hamlet may mean that his relationship had become an unnatural one, as it was partly founded on incest. 'Kind' is used for nature in Fal. Cæ., Ant. & Cle., Rich. II, and Tit. And. So, too, we have 'kindness,' i.e. unnatural, in Ham. II, ii, 609. MALONE gives substantially the best paraphrase: 'I am a little more than thy kinsman (for I am thy step-son), and am somewhat less than kind to thee (for I hate thee, as being the person who has incestuously married my mother). STEEVENS says that it was the King who was 'less than kind,' so also does CALDECOTT, who somewhat darkly interprets (yet Mererly quotes it approvingly): More than a common relation, having a confusedly accumulated title of relationship, you have less than benevolent, or less than even natural, feeling; by a play upon 'kind' in its double use and double sense—its use as an adjective, signifying benevolent; and its sense as a substantive, signifying nature. We have 'unkind' in this sense in Ven. & Ad. 204. 'Surely,' says KNIGHT, 'Hamlet applies these words to himself. The King has called him, 'My cousin Hamlet.' He says, in a suppressed tone, 'A little more than kin,'—a little more than cousin. The King adds, 'and my son.' Hamlet says, 'less than kind;'—I am little of the same nature with you.' SINGER follows Steevens and Caldecott in applying these words to the King. By 'less than kind' Hamlet means degenerate and base. 'Going out of kinds, (says Baret,) which goeth out of kind, which doth, or worketh dishonour to his kindred. Degener: Fortlignant.'—Alvarel, K. 59. 'Fortligner,' says Cotgrave, 'to degenerate, or grow out of kind, to differ in conditions from his ancestors.' That less than kind and out of kind have the same meaning who can doubt?' COLLIER aptly cites the following: 'I would he were not so near to us in kindred, then sure he would be nearer in kindness.'—Rowley, Search for Money, 1609, sig. B. (re-printed for the Percy Society). ELZE calls attention to the fact that probably in no other work is the word 'kind' used so frequently and so unambiguously as in The Tragedie of Corphodoc. White and Hudson follow Steevens, Caldecott, and Singer in referring these words to the King. The former paraphrases: In marrying my mother, you have made yourself something more than my kinsman, and, at the same time, have shown yourself unworthy of our race, our kind. Coleridge: This playing on words may be attributed to many causes or motives; as, either to an exuberant activity of mind, as in the higher comedy of Sh. generally; or to an imitation of it as a mere fashion, as if it were said,—'Is not this better than groaning?—or to a contemptuous exultation in minds vulgarized and overset by their success, as in the poetic instance of Milton's Devils in the battle; or it is the language of resentment, as is familiar to every one who has witnessed the quarrels of the lower orders, where is invariably a profusion of punning invective, whence, perhaps, nicknames have in a considerable degree sprung: or it is the language of suppressed passion, and especially of a hardly-smothered personal dislike. The first and last of these combine in Hamlet's case; and I have little doubt that Farmer is right in supposing the equivocation carried on in the expression, 'too much i' the sun,' or son.
King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you? 66

67. i' the sun] Johnson: A probable allusion to the proverb: 'Out of heaven's blessing into the warm sun.' Farmer suggested that a quibble was here intended between 'sun' and 'son.' Caldecott: Adopting this suggestion of Farmer's, the passage must mean, 'I have too much about me of the character of expectancy, at the same time that I am torn prematurely from my sorrows, and thrown into the broad glare of the sun and day; have too much of the son and successor and public standing without possession of my rights, and without a due interval to assuage my grief.' But a closer observer, (continues Caldecott), here says: 'One part of Farmer's suggestion is right, Hamlet means that he had not possession of his rights; but there was no quibble; the allusion is to the proverb referred to by Johnson, which means, 'to be out of house and home,' or, at least, to be in a worse temporal condition than a man was, or should be. Thus in Lear, ii, ii, 168, and '—they were brought from the good to the bad, and from Goodes blessing (as the proverb is) to a warme sonne.'—Preface to Grindal's Profitable Doctrine, 1555. And again, 'By such art he thought to have removed him, as we say, out of God's blessing into the warm sun.'—Raleigh's Hist. of the World, 1677. His being deprived of his right, i. e. his succession to the kingdom, Hamlet might therefore call 'being too much i' the sun.' Knight: There is no quibble. His meaning is explained by the old proverb, Staunton: Hamlet may mean, 'I am too much in the way; a mote in the royal eye;' but his reply is purposely enigmatic. Dyck (Gloss. s. v. heaven's benediction, &c.): The proverbial expression alluded to by Johnson is found in various authors, from Heywood down to Swift; the former has, 'In your running from him to me, yee runne Out of God's blessing into the warme sunne.'—Dialogue on Proverbs, Works, sig. G 2 ver. 1598; and the latter: 'Lord Sparkish. They say, marriages are made in heaven; but I doubt, when she was married, she had no friend there. Neverout. Well, she's got out of God's blessing into the warm sun.'—Polite Conversation, Dialogue 1, Works, vol. ix, p. 423. Ray gives as its equivalent, Ab equis ad ainos.

HAMLET

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,

68. nighted] nightly Fl, Rowe, KnT, White, Tsch. nightlike Coll. (MS).

—Proverbs, p. 192, ed. 1678. Hudson inclines to Farmer's suggestion, and adds: 'Perhaps there is the further meaning implied, that he finds too much sunshine of jollity in the Court, considering what has lately happened.' In Much Ado, II, i, 331, Beatrice says of herself, 'I am sun-burned,' and this phrase Hunter (i. 250) ingeniously explains, and gives it a significatiue akin to the present passage. 'To be in the sun,' 'to be in the warm sun,' 'to be sun-burned,' were phrases, says Hunter, 'not uncommon in the time of Sh., and for a century later, to express the state of being without family connections, destitute of the comforts of domestic life. There must have been some reason for this association of discomfort with what is generally considered comfort, at least among northern nations, and this reason is found in the old English version of the One Hundred and Twenty-first Psalm, in which occurs the passage, 'So that the sun shall not burn thee by day, nor the moon by night;' and as this psalm, in the earlier Rituals of the Church, was used in the Churching of Women, it followed that the matron who was surrounded by her husband and children was one who had received the benediction that the sun should not burn her, while the unmarried woman, who had received no such benediction, came to be spoken of by those who allowed themselves to use such jocular expressions as one 'still left exposed to the burning of the sun,' or, as Beatrice says, 'sun-burned.' When the translation of the Scriptures was revised, in the reign of James I, the word 'smite' was substituted in this verse for 'burn,' probably on account of these ludicrous associations; and for the same reason, on the last revision of the Liturgy, this psalm was left out of the service altogether. In the first and original use of this phrase, then, it denoted the state of being unmarried; thus Beatrice uses it. It then expanded so as to include the state of those who were without family connections of any kind; thus Hamlet uses it. It expanded still wider and included the state of those who have no home, and thus it is used in Lear, II, ii, 168. And it seems to have expanded wider still, and to have been sometimes used for any species of destitution, or distress, or evil. Hamlet therefore means, 'I have lost father and mother; you heap upon me the terms 'cousin' and 'son,' but I find myself forlorn, with none of the comforts remaining which arise out of the charities of kindred.' Ingenious as this explanation of Hunter's is, it applies with more force to the phrase used by Beatrice than to that used by Hamlet; we have no examples given us that 'to be in the sun' was ever thus understood, and for it we must take Hunter's unsupported assertion. Nicholson (N. & Qu. 25 May, 1867) thus paraphrases: Ham. turns off the King's query with an apparently courtly compliment,—Nay, my lord, I am too much in the sunshine of your favour, where I show but as a shadow (too much am I in that sunshine which I detest); deposed by you as heir and successor to the throne on which by God's providence I was placed, I am now gone to the world; instead of being in clouds and rain, amid sorrow and tears for my dead father and king, I find myself in the midst of marriage festivities and carousings. Moberly thinks the proverb may have meant that a person loses all special advantages, and is reduced to light and sunshine, which are the common inheritance of all.

68. nighted] For the general rule that participles formed from an adjective mean 'made of (the adjective), and derived from a noun, mean 'endowed with, or like (the noun),' see Abbott, § 294.
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.
Do not for ever with thy vailed lids Seek for thy noble father in the dust.
Thou know'st 'tis common; all that lives must die,
Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,
Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems madam? nay, it is; I know not seems.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,

72. common] SEYMOUR: Point thus: 'Thou know'st—'tis common—all that live,' i. e. 'Thou knowest this truth,—nay, it is known to all men—it is 'a common proof.'
74. common] CALDECOTT: Similar examples of frailty, connected with such an event, are the things or occurrences that he would have it inferred, were common. CLARENDON: We have 'common' and 'particular' opposed to each other in the very difficult, and probably corrupt, passage of 2 Hen. IV': IV, i, 94; and 'particular' opposed to 'general' in Trv. & Cres. I, iii, 340. COLERIDGE: Here observe Hamlet's delicacy to his mother, and how the suppression prepares him for the overflow in the next speech, in which his character is more developed by bringing forward his aversion to externals, and which betrays his habit of brooding over the world within him, coupled with a prodigality of beautiful words, which are the half-embrydings of thought, and are more than thought, and have an outness, a reality sui generis, and yet contain their correspondence and shadowy affinity to the images and movements within. Note also Hamlet's silence to the long speech of the King which follows, and his respectful, but general, answer to his mother.
81. haviour] For a list of dropped prefixes, see ABBOTT, § 450.
82. modes] KNIGHT: Mood [of the QqF] perhaps here signifies something That can denote me truly; these indeed seem,
For they are actions that a man might play;
But I have that within which passeth show;

These, but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,
To give these mourning duties to your father;
But, you must know, your father lost a father;
That father lost, lost his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation for some term
To do obsequious sorrow; but to persevere

beyond the mere manner of grief,—the manner as exhibited in the outward sadness.
The forms are the ceremonials of grief,—the moods its prevailing sullenness; the shows its fits of passion. HUNTER (ii, 217): Moods and 'modes' form a various reading well worthy of attention. In Q, in support of moods, the King just before said to Ham.: 'What mean these sad and melancholy moods?' DYCÉ: Nothing can be plainer than that Ham., throughout this speech, is dwelling entirely on the outward and visible signs of sadness.

82. shows] DYCÉ (ed. 2): I once felt inclined to adopt shapes, since in the third line after this we have 'passeth show'; but 'forms' and 'shapes' would be tautological. [Moreover, the 'show' in line 85 is an intentional and emphatic repetition of the 'shows' in this line. Ed.]

85. passeth] CORSON: The older form ['passeth'] not only suits the tone of the passage better, but the two 's' and the 'th' in 'passeth show' coming together are very cacophonous. SEYMOUR (ii, 144): Ham. in this scene is impatient, fretful and sarcastic; every reply is in contradiction of what is said to him. It is not till he comes to this line that he is actuated by tender sentiment.

87. commendable] CLARENDON: The accent is on the first syllable, as in Cor. IV, vii, 51. On the second in Mer. of Ven. I, i, 111. To avoid the alexandrine, ABBOTT, § 490, accents commendable, and scans 'Tis sweet and | commendable | able in | your na | ture, Hamlet.'

87. Hamlet] TSCHISCHWITZ: The names of persons addressed are very frequently not counted in the number of feet in a verse.

90. lost, lost] STEEVENS: Your father lost a father, i.e. your grandfather, which lost grandfather also lost his father. ABBOTT, § 246: An ellipsis of 'that' (relative) before the participle, 'That father (who was) lost,' &c.

92. obsequious] JOHNSON: Referring to obsequies, or funeral ceremonies.

92. perseverer] GIFFORD (Dyce's Remarks, &c., p. 204): So this word was In obstinate consolement is a course
Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief;
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,
A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,
An understanding simple and unschool'd;
For what we know must be and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we in our peevish opposition
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to Heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to Nature,
To Reason most absurd, whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first corse till he that died to-day,
'This must be so.' We pray you, throw to earth
This unprevailing woe, and think of us
As of a father; for let the world take note,

93. consolement] HEATH (p. 523): That is, self-consolement, nourishing our own grief. CALDECOTT holds it to be merely the expressions of grief.
95. incorrect] CALDECOTT: Contumacious towards.
98. what] For the relative use of 'what,' see ABBOTT, § 252.
99. any the most] FRANCKE: Compare 'any the rarest,' Cymb. I, iv, 65; and 'one the wisest,' Hen. VIII.: II, iv, 48. For the transposition of adjectival phrases, see ABBOTT, § 419 a.; and Macb. III, vi, 48. CLARENDON refers to Abbott, § 18.
99. to sense] CALDECOTT: That is, 'addressed to sense; in every hour's occurrence offering itself to our observation and feelings.'
104. who] For instances of 'who' personifying irrational antecedents, see ABBOTT, § 264.
105. till he] ABBOTT, §§ 184, 206: 'Till' is a preposition, and 'he' is used for him.
107. unprevailing] MALONE: Used of old for unavailing. 'He may often prevail himself of the same advantages in English.'—Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poetry. TSCHISCHWITZ: Here used in its medical sense, like the Latin, 'prevailere,' e.g. prævalet contra serpentium ictus, in Pliny. CLARENDON: See Rom. & Jul. III, iii, 60, where it is used in the sense referred to by Malone.
You are the most immediate to our throne,

110. immediate] STEVENS having said that the crown of Denmark was elective, BLACKSTONE (in a note which is not given among the other notes by him in vol. xii of the Sk. Soc.) agrees with him, adding: Though it must be customary, in elections, to pay some attention to the royal blood, which by degrees produced hereditary succession. Why, then, do the rest of the commentators so often treat Claudius as an usurper, who had deprived young Hamlet of his right by heirship to his father's crown? Hamlet calls him drunkard, murderer, and villain; one who had carried the election by low and mean practices; had 'Popp'd him between the election and my hopes—'; had 'From a shelf the precious diadem stoole, And put it in his pocket,' but never hints at his being an usurper. His discontent arose from his uncle's being preferred before him, not from any legal right which he pretended to set up to the crown. Some regard was probably had to the recommendation of the preceding prince in electing the successor. And therefore young Hamlet had 'the voice of the king himself for his succession in Denmark,' and he at his own death prophesies that 'the election would light on Fortinbras, who had his dying voice,' conceiving that by the death of his uncle he himself had been king for an instant, and had therefore a right to recommend. When, in the Fourth Act, the rabble wished to choose Laertes king, I understand that antiquity was forgot, and custom violated, by electing a new king in the lifetime of the old one, and perhaps also by the calling in a stranger to the royal blood. Ebie: It is not exactly consistent with this elective character that the queen should be called the imperial jointress of this warlike state.' MARSHALL (p. 16): Perhaps the comparative youth of Ham., and the fact that the kingdom was threatened by the Norwegians, were the reasons which induced the royal councillors to place the sceptre in the hands of Claudius.

110. nobility] WARBURTON: Magnitude. JOHNSON: Rather generosity. HEATH, Eminence and distinction.

110-112. with... impart] THEOBALD: The king had declared Hamlet his immediate successor, and with that declaration he imparts as noble a love, &c. Read, therefore, 'with' no less nobility,' &c. HAMMER adopted this suggestion. JOHNSON says 'impart' is impart myself, communicate whatever I can bestow; and HEATH and CAPELL both approve of this interpretation. MASON (p. 374): 'To impart toward' a person is not English. Moreover 'impart' is never neuter. Read, therefore, 'and still no less nobility of love' instead of 'with no less,' &c.; or else read,
'Do I my part toward you' instead of 'do I impart.' DELIUS suggests that Sh.
probably regarded 'no less nobility of love' as the object of 'impart,' and forgot, owing to the intermediate clause, that he had written 'with no less.' BADHAM (Cambridge Essays, 1856, p. 272) believes all difficulties removed by a slight transposition, thus: 'And with nobility no less of love,' &c. The nobility that he grants him is that of heir-presumptive. DICK pronounces this reading of Badham's 'very improper.'
What would he have said had he been TSCHISCHWITZ's reading, which substitutes wit

Wedgwood: The radical sense of the word is shown in Platt Deutsch ruse, rusie, noise, racket, disturbance; German rauschen, to rustle, roar, to do things with noise and bustle. Rausch is a flare-up, a sudden blaze; the same word is metaphorically applied to excitation from drink. Platt Deutsch runst, Old Norse rast, Dutch roet, tipsiness. When transferred to the cognate sense of a full glass or bumper, English rouse was not unnaturally supposed to be contracted from carouse (German garaus), with which it has a merely accidental resemblance—Rouse, noise, intemperate mirth.

Staunton: This plainly imports not simply a deep draught, but the accompaniment of some outcry, similar, perhaps, to our too too] Nares pointed out the intensive effect of this reduplication, giving instances from Holinshed and Spenser, and adding that it is common. Halliwell (Sk. Soc. Papers, 1844, i, 39) showed that 'too-too' is a provincial word recognized by Ray, and explained by him as meaning 'very well or good,' and that Watson a few years afterwards says it is 'often used to denote exceeding.' In proof 'that too-too, as used by our early writers, is a word, denoting 'exceedingly,' and that it ought to be so printed,' Halliwell gives from the poets twelve instances, from Skelton down to Hudibras, and refers to over thirty other passages where the phrase is found, extending from Promes and Cassandra to Young's Night Thoughts.

After all, Halliwell did not so print it in his edition.] Hunter doubts if this reduplication be emphatic. It appears to him to have been in sense neither more nor less than too, and he cites many instances from prose writers. Palsgrave, he adds, has beside to-much, to-little, &c., to too much, to too great, to too little, to too small, answering to par trop trop peu, par trop trop grant, par trop trop petit. The pronunciation was too-toe, as appears by this line of Constable's: 'But I did too-too inestimable wey her.' That the phrase was used with intensifying iteration, White thinks is clear from instances like the present, and from the similar iteration of other adverbs and adjectives in the literature of Shakespeare's day. For instance: 'Thy wit dost use still still more harmes to finde,'—Sidney's Arcadia, ii, p. 225, ed. 1603; 'While he did live far, far was all disorder,—Ib. v, p. 430; —your lesson is Far far too long to learne it without bocke,'—Astrophel and Stella, St. 56, Ib. p. 537; 'Stop you my mouth with still still kissing me,—Is. St. 81, 16. p. 547; ‘Even to thy pure and most loving breast,—Sh. Son. 110. In any case the compound epithet must have originated in the frequent iterative use of the word. STAUNTON thinks that the present instance must be regarded as an exception to Halliwell’s rule. Here the repetition of too is not only strikingly beautiful, rhetorically, but it admirably expresses that morbid condition of the mind which makes the unhappy prince deem all the uses of the world but ‘weary, stale, flat and unprofitable.’ HALLIWELL notes that his copy of F, reads ‘too too,’ with the hyphen.

129-159. COERIDGE: This tedium vitae is a common oppression on minds cast in the Hamlet mould, and is caused by disproportionate mental exertion, which necessitates exhaustion of bodily feeling. Where there is a just coincidence of external and internal action, pleasure is always the result; but where the former is deficient, and the mind’s appetency of the ideal is unchecked, realities will seem cold and unmoving. In such cases passion combines itself with the indefinite alone. In this mood of his mind the relation of the appearance of his father’s spirit in arms is made all at once to Hamlet: it is—Horatio’s speech, in particular—a perfect model of the true style of dramatic narrative; the purest poetry, and yet in the most natural language, equally remote from the inkhorn and the plough.

129. solid flesh] MOBERLY: The base affinities of our nature are ever present to Hamlet’s mind. Here he thinks of the body as hiding from us the freshness, life, and nobleness of God’s creation. If it were to pass away, silently and spontaneously, like the mist on a mountain-side, or if, curtain-like, we might tear it down by an act of violence, it may be that we should see quite another prospect; at any rate, the vile things now before us would be gone for ever.

130. resolve] STEEVENS: This means the same as dissolve. NARES cites: ‘I could be content to resolve myself into tears, to rid thee of trouble.’—Lyl’s Euphues, p. 38. CALDECOTT: ‘To thaw or resolve that which is frozen, regelo,’ Bare’s Airearie.

132. canon] THEOBALD first pointed out that this did not refer to a piece of artillery, but to a divine decree. HUNTER (ii, 218): This is an unhappy word to use here. I fear the truth is that the noise of the cannon in the King’s speech was still ringing in the Poet’s ears. GRANT WHITE (The Galaxy, Oct. 1869): Here and in Cym. III, iv, 77-80, there is a particular assertion of the existence of a specific prohibition of suicide by Divine law. Sh. may have known the Bible, as he knew all other things in his day knowable, so much better than I do that I may not without presumption question what he says with regard to it. But I have not been able to discover any such specific prohibition. WORDSWORTH (Shakespeare’s Knowledge and Use of the Bible, p. 149): Unless it be the Sixth Commandment, the ‘cannon’ must be one of natural religion.

132. slaughter] CORSON: The ending -er of ‘slaughter’ should be read as as

135. O fie] Elize: In F, the emphatic iteration of exclamations is very frequent, and is probably due to the pathos of the actors. CORSON: 'Ah,' of the Qq, does not express the feeling of the speaker so well as the 'Oh' of the F.

135. garden] CORSON (p. 10): There should be no comma after 'garden,' as the

137. merely] Complete. See Macro. IV, iii, 152. HUDSON: Observe how

Elizet's brooding melancholy leads him to take a morbid pleasure in making things

140. Hyperion] FARMER (Essay, &c., p. 37, note, ed. ii) says that this name is used by Spenser with the same error in quantity. CALDECOTT adds, that not only did our old poets totally disregard the quantity in this instance, but the moderns also have made it altogether subservient to their convenience; and quotes MITFORD as saying what, 'Spenser has Iole, Pylades, Caphareus, Roxean.' Gascoigne, in his Ulimum Vale: 'Kind Erato and wanton Thalia.' Gray, in his Progress of Poetry: 'Hyperion's march and glittering shafts of War.' CLARENDON: Sh. always accent the antepen-ultimate of the name of this god, whom he identifies with the sun, as in Homer's Odyssey, i, 8. ABBOTT, § 501: A trimeter couplet, with an extra syllable [satyr] on the first trimeter. It might almost be regarded as separate lines of three accents.

140. to a satyr] MÄTZNER (ii, 289): The comparison of one object with another becomes the expression of the relation thereto in a qualitative or quantitative regard.
The object introduced by to forms the measure for the comparison. CLARENDON:
So in Cymb. III, iii, 56, and Ham. I, v, 52; III, i, 52.

140. satyr] WARBURTON (followed by WHITE) thinks that Pan is here meant, the brother of Hyperion, or Apollo. ELIZE says he does not know what authority Warburton has for this relationship, which, moreover, cannot be referred to here because of the indefinite article, 'a satyr.' [Elize forgets that Pan, as well as Apollo,
That he might not betheem the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on; and yet, within a month,—
Let me not think on’t.—Frailety, thy name is woman!—
A little month! or ere those shoes were old
With which she follow’d my poor father’s body, was said to be the son of Jupiter; but his objection on the score of the indefinite article is sound. Ed.]

141. betheem] STEEVES: This word occurs in Golding’s Ovid, 1587, and from the corresponding Latin word (dignatur, bk. x, line 157) must necessarily mean, to vouchsafe, deign, permit, or suffer; ‘Yet could he not betheem The shape of anie other bird then egle for to seeme?’ — NARES: Spenser uses it in the same sense: ‘So would I (said th’ enchanter), glad and faine Betheeme to you, this sword.’—Farie Queene, II, viii, 19. Also in Mid. N. D. I, i, 131. COLLIERS (ed. i): In this passage, from Mid. N. D., the word is used in a different sense, being the provincial word seem, which is still used for pour out in the north of England. MOBERLY: Here it is used causatively: ‘He would not allow it to be beseeming.’

147. or ere] MÄTZNER (iii, 446): A strengthening of the notion of time is given by ever (‘er, ere), (comp. Germ. je), which in this case usually preserves the old form, or. Thus, King John, IV, iii, 20, and V, vi, 44. CLARENDON: See Temp. I, i, 11, and line 183 of this scene. Also Macb. IV, iii, 173, or ABBOTT, § 131.

147. shoes] INGLEBY (N. & Qu. 2 Feb. 1856) finds an inappropriateness and an incongruity in Hamlet’s making the antiquity, or wear and tear, of his mother’s shoes the measure of her grief, and accordingly suggests shoes for ‘shoes’. Compare line 82, where ‘shows of grief’ is defined by Hunter to be ‘mourning apparel,’ nay, by Hamlet himself, to be ‘the trappings and the suits of woe.’ What, then, are the shoes with which Gertrude followed her husband’s body to the grave but ‘customary suits of solemn black’? What were her Niobe’s tears but ‘th’ fruitful river in the eye’? What were these but the ‘forms and shows of grief’? Let the text be thus paraphrased, ‘Before my mother’s “mourning-weeds” (2 Hem. VI) were worn out, the dreed them for the wedding-gear. Oh! wicked speed,’ &c.
Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she,—
O God! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,

I have little doubt that Sh. wrote, 'moist and righteous tears.'

occurred to WALKER, who (Crit. ii, 242) says: ‘ I cannot help suspecting that Sh.
was of the Latin, or Horatio’s, use of the word, and that celerity is a word, which was in use at the time. ’ CLARENDON pronounces in favour of celerity, not adroitness, as in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 286. TSCHICHTZITZ: To say that ‘ dexterity ’ means celerity, involves an intolerable pleonasm when connected with ‘wicked speed.’ Sh. had clearly in mind the Italian destrezza, which contains the idea of deceit, and consequently of a haste or of an artifice which is morally wrong.
158. cannot] CLARENDON: Observe the double negative so frequent in older English writers. The latest instance of it we have noticed in any careful writer is in Congreve’s Love for Love, iv, 4. [See III, ii, 190.]
159. heart] CORY: ‘ Break ’ is a subjunctive, not an imperative, and ‘ heart’ to maintain this silence in presence of the courtiers under all circumstances, even after the appearance of the Ghost. It is not until his heart really breaks that he breaks this silence also, and gives Horatio permission to proclaim what has happened.

160. well] COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) omits ‘ well. ’ It spoils the line, and is not mere surplusage, for how was Hamlet thus early to know whether Horatio were ‘well’ or not. [Collier omits it in his text.]
161. forget myself] SEYMOUR (ii, 147): This may mean: ‘ Or I have lost the CALDECOTT: That is, reciprocally use: I’ll put myself on an exact level with you.

HALLIWELL: Hamlet means that he will change the name Horatio has given himself, that of poor servant, to good friend; or perhaps as Johnson explains it.

TSCHISCHWITZ: It still corresponds with ‘machen,’ in our phrase of courteous greeting: ‘Was machen Sie?’ KRIGLEY (Expositor, p. 286): I suspect that here, and in a following line, and in II, ii, 266, we should read ‘makes’ with an ellipsis of be. The answers seem to indicate it.

167. even] JOHNSON: There is no need of Hamner’s change. Between the first and eighth scene of this act a day must pass; and how much of it is over there is nothing to determine. The King has held a council. It may as well be evening as morning. STEVENS: The change might be justified by I, i, 174. TURWHITT: Good even or den was the usual salutation from noon, the moment that good morrow became improper; from the course of the incidents, precedent and subsequent, the day may here be well supposed to be turned of noon. [See Rom. & Jul. II, iv, 98.] WHITE (St. Scholar, p. 409): This is addressed to Bernardo, whom Hamlet does not recognize.

170. hear] Dyce: The next line proves the reading of FF to be erroneous. HUNTER (ii, 219): The reading of the FF is better, even if it had not the effect of obviating the disagreeable recurrence of the sounds ‘hear’ and ‘ear.’ CORSON also thinks the FF more euphonious.

177. bakes-meats] COLLINS: It was anciently the general custom to give a cold entertainment to mourners at a funeral. In distant counties this practice is continued among the yeomans. See The Tragique Historie of the Faire Valeria of London, 1598: 'His corpse was with funerall pompe conveyed to the church, and there solemnly entered, nothing omitted which necessitie or custom could claime; a sermon, a banquet, and like observations.' Again, in the old romance of Syr Legore, no date: 'A great feast would he holde Upon his quenes mornyng day, That was buryed in an abbay.' MALONE: See, also, Hayward's Life and Raigne of King Henrie the Fourth, 1599, p. 135: 'Then hee [King Richard II] was obscurely interred,—without the charge of a dinner for celebrating the funeral.' DODGE: This practice was certainly borrowed from the cena feralis of the Romans, alluded to in Juvenal's 5th Satire and in the Laws of the Twelve Tables. It consisted of the offering of a small plate of milk, honey, wine, flowers, &c. to the ghost of the deceased. In the North this feast is called an arvval or arvval-upper; and the loaves that are sometimes distributed among the poor, arval-bread. JOHN ADDIS, JUN. (N. & Qu. 9 Feb. '67) cites an apposite passage from Massinger: 'The same rosemary that serves for the funeral will serve for the wedding.'—Old Law, IV, i. TSCHICHSITZ: This is one word. See Chaucer (Cant. Tales, v. 344): 'Withouten bake mete never was his house.' The combination of a funeral and a marriage feast contained nothing repugnant to the ancient Northern mind. At the end of cap. 14 of Frithiof's Saga, it is related that Frithiof prepared a sumptuous feast, to which came all his followers, and thereupon was held the funeral feast of Hring the King, and likewise the marriage feast of Frithiof and Ingiborg. Here in Hamlet what was so abhorrent was that the widow should have married so quickly. CLARENDON: We have 'bakemeats' in Gen. xl, 17.

two opposite meanings from the single Anglo-Saxon word derian, to hurt, thence deriving our word dear—not cheap (when the season dereth the crops, causing a dearth); hence what is not cheap is precious, valued; whence comes the secondary meaning of dear—beloved. In this passage ‘dearest’ has reverted to its original meaning of hurtful, mischievous. This plausible derivation, or rather explanation, of the two distinct and contrary meanings of the word has been followed by Richardson in his Dictionary, and by the edd. above named, except Craik, who detected Tooke’s error in tracing the word, in both its meanings, to one root, by showing that the word dear—high-priced, precious, beloved, is the Anglo-Saxon debre, dare, dyre, from the verb debran or dyran, to hold dear, to love. Craik thus explains the different senses which the word assumes: the notion properly involved in it of love having first become generalized into that of a strong affection of any kind, thence passes on into that of such an emotion the very reverse of love, or as Clarendon concisely states it: ‘dear’ is used of whatever touches us nearly either in love or hate, joy or sorrow. Müttzer (i, 156) gives a list of two hundred and thirty-five words which had originally different forms (and of course different meanings), but which now are found in only one form; among them (i, 206) is with the different original forms pointed out by Craik. 190. who] Collier (ed. 2): Notwithstanding the (MS), it may be doubted whether Sh. did not write ‘who.’ Clarendon: Sh. very generally uses who for the accusative. Dyce (Remarks, &c., p. 205): The right punctuation is doubtful ‘Saw who?’ (i.e. whom); nor do I recollect any performer of Ham. who understood the words but as a single question; no pause of astonishment was made between ‘Saw’ and ‘who’ by the two Kembles, Kean, and Young,—none is made by Macready and the younger Kean.

198. vast] Malone: By wast is meant nothing more than middle. So, in Marston's Malecontent, 1604: 'Tis now about the immodest wast of night,' i.e. midnight. Again, in The Puritan, 1607: '—ere the day be spent to the girdle.' See Minsheu's Dict. 1617: 'Wast, middle, or girdle-steed.' Collier: 'Vast' is used in the same sense in Tempest, I, ii, 327, where 'vast of night' means the vacancy or void of night, and the phrase here means the silent vacancy of midnight. To take wast of Q, in the sense of wast, or middle of a person, is to impute mere tautology to Sh., instead of the fine meaning of deserted emptiness and stillness of midnight. White: Perhaps we should read waste. But in either case the sense remains the same,—the dead void; and 'vast' seems to have been used substantively in this sense by Sh., if not by his contemporaries. Clarendon: It here means emptiness; the time when no living thing is seen. We have it also in the sense of an empty space in Wint. Tale, I, i, 30. 'Wast,' i. e. 'waste,' is in origin the same word as 'vast,' and has the same sense. There is, of course, an easy pun on waste and waste, but it is not probable that Sh. meant to make one in this place.

200. at point] See Mach. IV, iii, 135.

201. Appears] Clarke: This speech shows notably Shakespeare's use of the past and present tenses in narration.

204. distill'd] Knight [See Text. Notes]: To still is to fall in drops;—they were dissolved,—separated drop by drop. 'Almost to jelly.' Collier (Notes, &c., p. 533): Neither 'distill'd' nor 'be still'd' can be satisfactory; but it is apparent that 'be still'd' of F, was a misprint for 'bechill'd.' Bernardo and Marcellus were almost chilled to jelly by their apprehensions, 'the cold fit of fear' having come powerfully upon them. Dyce (Notes, &c., p. 135): Is there not something strange in such an expression as 'human bodies chilled almost to jelly by fear'? (I doubt if the verb still (to fall in drops, melt) ever was, or could be, used with the augmentative prefix &c.) According to the Q2, they melted, dissolved almost to jelly with,' &c. A passage of Claudian (De Sexto Cons. Hom. v, 345), 'liquefactaque fulgere cupis Caelis, et subitis fluxere apparitus ense, is thus rendered by Addison, 'Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd.' Singer (ed. 2): So also in Sylvester's Du Bartas (ed. 4, p. 764), 'Melt thee, distill thee, turn to wax or snow.' Collier (ed. 2): Jelly becomes jelly only by being 'bechill'd,' and when it is argued that 'distill'd' may mean melted, it is forgotten that Horatio does not say that his comrades were melted to 'jelly,' for jelly is no longer jelly when melted, but that they were 'bechill'd to jelly,' it is jelly, because it has been 'bechill'd.' Besides, Sh, never uses 'distill'd' (often as it occurs in his plays) as melted, but as extracted; and even in this very tragedy, and in this very Act, he speaks of a 'leperous distillment' as procured by distillation from 'cursed hebenon.' Therefore we feel morally certain that Shakespeare's word here was 'bechill'd.' Bailey (i, 47) dissents from

Collier on physical grounds. 'Solids cannot be _chilled_ into gelatine.' 'It is the exclusive privilege of liquids (and liquids only of a certain description) to be _cooled_ down into that tremulous substance. Hence the true reading seems to stare us in the face: "whilst they _dissolved_ Almost," &c.' 'It may deserve mentioning that when the chilling effects of any passion are chiefly in view, it is the which is usually described by Sh. as the seat of the refrigeration.' In view of the fact that Sh. has several times used the word 'thrill' to express the effect of terror, Bailey suggests 'a plausible reading,' so he says, for the present passage: 'while they both _thrilled_.' 'Or,' if the prefix _be_ should be prefixed, we might read 'while they _be_ thrilled.' HUDDSON: 'Distill'd (meaning to fall in drops, to melt) is a very natural and fit expression for the cold sweat caused by intense fear. CORSON: 'Be-

216. it head] Craik (Note on Jul. Cas. I, ii, 124): The word its does not occur in the authorized translation of the Bible; it is, however, found in Sh. There is one instance [the only one, according to Rolfe, where it is not spelled its, with an apostrophe] in Meas. for Meas. I, ii, 4. But the most remarkable of the plays in this particular is probably Wint. Tale; where in I, ii, 151-158, we have as many as three instances in a single speech of Leontes; again in I, ii, 260, and III, iii, 6. On the other hand, we have the following instances in F, of the use of it in possessive sense, where we now use its: Wint. Tale, II, iii, 178; III, ii, 101; King John, II, i, 160, 161, 162; Lear, I, iv, 235 (his); the passage 'that nature which ostennis itself,' in Lear, IV, ii, 32, is not in F; but Q has his and Q it. There is also one passage in our English Bible, Levit. xxv, 5, in which the reading of the original edition is 'of it own accord.' The modern reprints give 'its.' [Rolfe adds: In the Geneva Bible, 1579, we have 'it owne accorde,' in Acts, xii, 10.] French (English Past and Present) doubts whether Milton has once admitted its into Paradise Lost, although, when that was composed, others frequently allowed it. But he does use it occasionally, e.g. 'The mind is its own place.'—Par. Lost, i, 254; and '—falsehood...returns Of force to its own likeness.'—Ib, iv, 313. [Rolfe: See also Hymn on the Nativity, 106.] Generally, however, he avoids the word, and easily does so by personifying most of his substantives; it is only when this cannot be done that he reluctantly accepts the services of the little parvenu monosyllable. Bacon has frequently his in the neuter. Trench notices the fact of the occurrence of its in Rowley's Poems as decisive against their genuineness. The modern practice is the last of three distinct stages through which the language passed, as to this use of its, in the course of less than a century. First, we have his serving for both masculine and neuter; secondly, we have his restricted to the masculine, and the neuter left with hardly any recognized form; thirdly, we have the defect of the second stage remedied by the frank adoption of the heretofore rejected its. And the most curious thing of all in the history of the word is the extent to which, before its recognition as a word admissible in serious com position, even the occasion for its employment was avoided or eluded. This is very remarkable in Sh. The very conception which we express by its probably does not occur once in his works for ten times that it is to be found in any modern writer. So that we may say the invention or adoption of this form has changed not only our English style, but even our manner of thinking. The Saxon personal pronoun was, in the nominative singular, He, masculine; Hed, feminine; Hit, neuter. He we still retain; for Hed we have substituted She, apparently a modification of Soh, the feminine of the demonstrative; Hit we have converted into It (though the aspirate is still often heard in the Scottish dialect). The genitive was Hire for the feminine (whence our modern Her), and His both for the masculine and the neuter. It is to be understood, of course, that its, however convenient, is quite an irregular forma-

Bullockar (English Expositor, 1616) defines: Beaver In armour it signifieth that part of the helmet which may bee lifted vp, to take breath more freely. Douce (i, 439) shows that it is frequently used to denote the whole helmet, as in 3 Hen. VI: I, i, 12, and gives representations of the helmets and its parts; as also Knight at 2 Hen. IV: IV, i, 120. Worcester cites Stephenson as deriving it from Fr. bevoir, because it enabled the wearer to drink. The definitions of Richardson and Wedowood are not borne out by references to Sh. Hunter (ii, 219): Some say it ought to be ‘he wore his beaver down,’ but Sh. has the authority of one who ought to know something concerning what belongs to knights and chivalry: ‘they their bevers up did rear.’—Faerie Queene, IV, vi, 25.

with a falling infection, and then 'or red' added, after a pause, with a certain anxious impatience: Pale, was he? or red; how was it? In other words, he hasn't the two ideas, 'pale' and 'red,' in his mind at once; when he first speaks he has only that of 'Pale,' on which his voice rests. He then adds, somewhat impatiently, 'or red.' A semicolon would mark the division better than a comma.

236. like] CLARENDON : See II, ii, 336. This use of 'like' instead of 'likely' has become provincial. Congreve (Way of the World, IV, iv) puts it into the mouth of the rustic, Sir Wilfull.

239. grizzled] MORERLY: The meaning seems to be 'grizzly'—foul and disordered. Probably Hamlet's meaning in asking the question was to find whether his father showed signs of a violent death, like Gloster, in 2 Hen. VI: III, ii, 175; but he repels the supposition at once, as being unwilling to connect personal violence with the thought of his father.

239. grizzled? no?] AS YOU LIKE IT (Gent. Maga. 1760, vol. Ix. 403): 'No' appears to have been given very improperly to Ham. The question is designed to try how far Hor. has observed the Ghost. Ham. therefore proposes the question of a beard of a different colour to that of his father's. To which Hor., giving a negative to the question, describes the beard as it really was. This ingenious suggestion carries probability almost sufficient to justify its adoption in the text; for two reasons—First. After an affirmative question we instinctively anticipate the answer yes, not 'no,' which would more naturally follow a negative question: His beard was not grizzled? Secondly. It is eminently characteristic of the precise Horatio ('e'en the justest man Ham. had ever found) to draw a nice distinction between 'grizzled' and 'sable silvered.' He had been most exact in his estimate of the time the Ghost stayed, and he would be equally exact even as to the colour Hoff. It was, as I have seen it in his life, a sable silver'd.

'Erchance 'twill walk again.

Hoff. I warrant it will.

And whatsoever else shall hap to-night
Give it an understanding, but no tongue;
I will requite your loves. So fare you well,
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you; farewell.

[Exeunt all but Hamlet.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play; would the night were come!
Till then sit still, my soul; foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes. [Exit.

silence still,' i.e. Let all three of you continue to preserve silence respecting it. 'Sh. probably wrote, 'Let it be in your treble silence still.' Compare Otm. V, vi, 388:

'Your three motives to the battle,' i.e. the motives of you three, not your motives three in number. CLARENDON: Regard it as a secret which ought to be kept.

See WALKER, Crit. i, 183; or ABBOTT, § 3.

252. duty] WHITE: That there is a mere omission of the final s appears both by Hamlet's reply, 'Your loves,' and by the usage of Shakespeare's time. I think the reading here of Q is of little or no importance, so variable is our old typography as to the final s in such words.

253. loves] STAUTON: The hurried repetition, 'your loves, your loves,' of Q, well expresses the perturbation of Hamlet at the moment, and that feverish impatience to be alone and commune with himself which he evinces whenever he is particularly moved. CORSON: Love is better than 'loves' of the Qq, as being opposed to 'duty.' love should be uttered with a slow and deliberate downward wave: Your love, I ask; I don't wish you to act from a sense of duty alone; I ask your love in the matter. Q, throws light on the true meaning. Hamlet, though always princely, is impatient of certain conventional courtesies. [See note on 'loves,' I, i, 173.]

257. to men's eyes] CORSON: It is questionable as to whether this phrase should be connected with 'rise' or with 'o'erwhelm.' A reader finds it awkward to connect it with 'rise.' The omission of the comma in F, after 'them,' thus co-

7. primy] Nares: Early, belonging to the spring; perhaps, peculiar to this passage.
8. Forward] Caldecott: Early, ripe before due season; and thence having in it the principles of premature decay.
9. suppliance] Johnson: It is plain that perfume is necessary to exemplify the idea of sweet, not lasting. With the word suppliance I am not satisfied, and yet dare hardly offer what I imagine to be right. I suspect that sussiance, or some such word, formed from the Italian, was then used for the act of fumigating with sweets.
10. so?] Corson (who prefers the punctuation of the Q1FT): This speech is certainly meant to express Ophelia's submissiveness to her brother's opinion, not to question the correctness of it.
11-14. For...withal] Tschischwitz transposes these lines to follow line 32, because, as he alleges, they afford not the slightest explanation to 'Think it no more,' and because they have been evidently inserted in the wrong place through some blunder, and are intelligible only when restored to their proper order, as he deems it.

all the three instances in which Sh. uses the word (the third is 2 Hen. IV. III. ii. 276).
It comes from the Saxon theow or thec, whence also thigh, and must not be confounded with the obsolete theos—manners, or qualities of mind, which is from the Saxon theow. This latter theos is common in Spenser, Chaucer, and earlier writers; the former is found very rarely before Shakespeare’s day. It occurs (as cited by Nares) in Turberville’s Ovid’s Epistles, 1567: ‘the thews of Helens passing form.’
In the earlier version of Layamon’s Brut, at the end of the twelfth century (verse 6361): ‘Mannone strengst of maune and of theawe of alle thissere theode’ (of men strongest of main, or strength, and of sinew, of all this land). But Sir F.
Madden remarks (III. 471): ‘This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities, nor has any other passage of an earlier date than the sixteenth century been found in which it is so used.’ \(Tschirschlig: \) The \(s\) is probably not a sign of the plural, but a derivative suffix for th, whence we may infer in abstract theoth, denoting growth, in later English theoth.

12. this] Corson (p. 12): ‘His’ of F₁, stands for ‘nature’: as nature’s temple grows, the service within widens. There is a metaphor implied.

12. temple] See Macb. II. iii. 64; R. of L. 719, and 1172, in proof of Calde-cott’s remark that this is never but on grave occasions applied to the body.

13. inward service] Caldecott: As the body increases in bulk, the duties calling forth the offices and energies of the mind increase equally. \(Morley: \) ‘Ανάνομον τῷ άλλων ανθρώπων χάρα πρὸς τὸν χώρον.—Herodotus, iii. 134.

14. Grow] Hudson: The passage would seem to imply that Hamlet is not so old as he is elsewhere represented to be.

15. cautel] Dyce (Glos.): Craft, deceit. ‘Cautelle: A wit, cautel, sleight;
a craftie reach, or fetch, guileful devise or endeuer: also, craft, subtillize, trumperie, decit, cunenage.’—Cotgrave. \(Clarendon: \) Only used elsewhere by Sh. in L. C.
303. Rush ton (Sh’s Testamentary Language, p. 43): Sh. may have written these lines remembering the following passage from Swinburne’s Treatise on Wills, 1590:
‘There is no cautel under heaven, whereby the libertine of making or revoking his testament can be utterly taken away,’—p. 61. Again Laertes says, line 20: ‘He may not carve for himself;’ and according to Swinburne, ‘it is not lawful for legataries to carve for themselves, taking their legacies at their own pleasure,’ &c.—p. 50.

16. virtue] Johnson: It here seems to comprise both excellence and power, and may be explained the pure effects. Mason: His virtuous intentions. Stauton:
It here seems to import essential goodness; as we speak of the virtues of herbs, &c.

16. will] Caldecott: The Ff contain a clear misprint by the eye catching and giving the same word twice.
For he himself is subject to his birth;
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself, for on his choice depends
The safety and health of this whole state,
And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
Unto the voice and yielding of that body
Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves you,
It fits your wisdom so far to believe it
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.

20. Carve] CLARKE (Note on ‘Carver,’ Rich. II: ii, iii, 144). Sh. uses the verb to ‘carve’ very expressively to signify ‘hew recklessly’ and to ‘select selfishly.’ 21. safety] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 22) conjectured that ‘sanctity’ of Ff should be sanitie, because the welfare, preservation of the state was in some degree concerned by Hamlet’s choice of a wife. Theobald calls attention to the same misprint of one word for the other in II, ii, 208, and Marb. IV, iii, 144. WALKER (Crit. iii, 88, also Vers. 159) makes the same conjecture: ‘Sanity must surely be the right reading; sanctity, at any rate, is absurd. Frequentius, ut sape fit, pro rariori; the pulpit having familiarized sanctity to men’s minds.’ Both DYCE and ABBOTT, § 484, agree with Walker. The latter says that the present line could not be scanned without prolonging both ‘health’ and ‘whole.’ ‘Such a double prolongation is extremely improbable, considering the moderate emphasis required.
    More probably, Theobald’s suggestion is right.’ MALONE: The editor of F₆, finding the metre defective, in consequence of the article being omitted before ‘health,’ instead of supplying it, for ‘safety’ substituted a word of three syllables. COLLIER:
    ‘Safety’ was often of old, as here, pronounced as a trisyllable.

21. this] CORSON (p. 12): The of Ff is better than this; ‘state’ being used abstractly.
26, 27. As . . . deed] CALDECOTT [see Text. Notes]: As he, in that peculiar rank and class that he fills in the state, and the power and means thereto annexed, may enable himself to give his professions effect. COLLIER: Sect and force may be strained into a meaning, but ‘act and place’ require no such effort. The latter is the reading of the (MS) also. WHITE: What tolerable sense has either Qq or F₆, in connection with the context? F₆ manifestly corrects two errors, but makes one—‘force’ for place. ‘Sect’ is class, rank, or, in the slang of society, set. So in Lear, V, iii, 18.

7. canker] PATTERSON (Nat. Hist. of Insects, &c., p. 34): The canker (Lono-e revana) chooses for its domicile 'the fresh lap of the crimson rose,' and lives ng the blossoms, preventing the possibility of their further development.

7. remarkable that Chaucer, who in general comes so close to the French, always slates bouton, the rosebud, in the Roman de la Rose, by bothum, and not button.

7. blastments] CLARENDON: Only here in Sh. Coleridge uses it in the last se of Zapolya, p. 265: 'Shall shoot his blastments on the land.'
Be wary then; best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

43. safety] The not uncommon omission of the article before superlatives is perhaps to be explained, according to ABBOTT, § 82, by the double meaning of the superlative, which means not only the best of the class, but also very good.

46. watchman] See [Macb. III, v, 32]. Also Vellius Paterculus, ii, 2182: frequentissimum initium esse calamitatis securitatem. ELZE: See [Tro. & Cress. II, ii, 14]: 'the wound of peace is surety, Surety secure.'

48. pastors] TSCHISCHWITZ does *'not scruple to change' this to the sing. 'pastor,' parsing the first 'Do' as the auxiliary verb to the second, as well as to 'show,' while *'Himself' remains in grammatical agreement with what has preceded.

49. puff'd and reckless] CALDECOTT: Bloated and swollen, the effect of excess; and heedless and indifferent to consequences. 'Ignavus, inefficax, recheteesse.'— _Ortus Vocab._ 1514.

we are regist'd with a style very different, and flowers of speech is his way.' CALDEROTT: These golden precepts very ill accord with the character and intellect imputed to Polonius in the rest of the play, where he appears to be what Hamlet calls him, a 'tedious old fool,' a 'wretched rash fool,' 'a foolish prating knave.' KNIGHT adds: 'It is remarkable that in Q1 the "precepts" are printed with inverted commas, as if they were taken from some unknown source; or, at any rate, as if Polonius had delivered them by an effort of memory alone.' DYCE (Remarks, &c. p. 207): Not at all 'remarkable.' In the Q1 (except Q3), a speech of the Queen, IV, v, 17-20, is 'printed with inverted commas.' [See textual notes on lines 36, 38, 39, of this scene. Ed.] In various other early plays the Gnomic Portions are so distinguished [Dyce here cites many examples from early poetry of thus marking maxims; he might have descended to much later times. Warburton, in his edition of Sh., uniformly keeps the custom. Ed.]. HUNTER (ii, 219): Polonius is the dull, prosing politician of the time. There is probably much personal satire in the character. It was the practice of those politicians to deliver maxims to their children, to be their guide in life. Thus Lord Burghley left ten admirable precepts of worldly prudence to his son Robert, afterwards Earl of Salisbury, which may be read in the Desiderata Curiosa; and in The Horatian Miscellany is a letter from Sir Henry Sydney to Phillip his son, containing divers lessons of prudence delivered in a didactic form. That there was some individual noblemen more particularly pointed at in the character of Polonius I can entertain no doubt, nor that some attentive observer of the men of those times will one day trace the Poet home. Could it be the Lord Chamberlain? Fryné alludes to the practice of bringing living noblemen upon the stage, and names particularly the Lord Admiral, the Lord Treasurer, and Count Gondomer, as persons with whom the stage had made free. KUSHTON (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 46): The advice of Euphues to Philautius is probably the origin of these few precepts of Polonius. For line 59, see Euphues:—"Be not lavish of thy tongue." Lines 64, 65, thus Euphues:—"Every one that shaketh thee by the hand, is not joined to thee in heart." Lines 66, 67, Euphues:—"Be not quarrellous for every light occasion: they never fight without provoking, and once provoked they never cease." Line 68, Euphues: 'It shall be there better to hear what they say, than to speak what thou thinkest.' [See also II, ii, 86; and FRENCH, in Appendix, p. 239.]

the friends whom, and the adoption of them, thou hast tried and proved. CLAREN don gives the simplest explanation: 'and whose adoption thou hast tried;' but DELIS expounds 'and their adoption tried' as a participial parenthesis: when thou hast put their adoption to the test. TSCHISCHWITZ also (followed by MOBERLY) pro nounces this clause a participle, or nominative, absolute, and cites MINZER, iii, 85.

63. hoops] MALONE: 'Grapple' strongly supports Pope's reading, hooks. See MINSHEU: 'To hook or grapple, viz. to grapple and to board a ship.' It may be also observed, that hooks are sometimes made of steel, but 'hoops' never. STEEVENS:
We have, however, a 'hoop of gold' in 2 Hen. IV: IV, iv, 43. PYE (Comments, &
p. 311): I believe hoops are at least as often made of steel as hearts are, or as fore heads are of brass. SINGER: 'Hoops' is an evident misprint for hooks. Grappling hooks is a familiar term, but who ever heard of grappling with 'hoops' of steel?
WHITE: It is far from improbable that 'hooks' is right. CLAREN: Pope's reading makes the figure suggested by 'grapple' the very reverse of what Sh. in tended; grappling with hooks is the act of an enemy and not of a friend.

64. dull] JOHNSON: Do not make thy palm callous by shaking every man by the

74. Are...that] Steevens: 'Chief' may be used adverbially, a practice common in Sh.; 'chiefly generous.' I would more willingly read, 'Select and generous, are most choice in that.' Ritson (Remarks, &c. p. 193): The nobility of France are select and generous above all other nations, and chiefly in the point of apparel; the richness and elegance of their dress. Malone: May we suppose that 'chief' of the Ff is a word borrowed from heraldry? They in France approve themselves to be of a most select and generous escutcheon by their dress. Chief, in heraldry, is the upper third part of the shield. See Minshew. This is very harsh; yet I hardly think that the words 'of a' could have been introduced without some authority from the MS. 'Generous' = 'generous.' 'Chief,' however, may have been used as a substantive, for note or estimation. Knight: It is scarcely necessary to go to her-ardry for an explanation of the word: we have it in composition, as in mischief, and the now obsolete bonchief. 'Chief,' literally the head, here signifies eminence, su-priority. Those of the best rank and station are of a most select and generous superiority in the indication of their dignity by their apparel. Collier (ed. i): The meaning perhaps is: 'Are of a most select and generous rank and station, chiefly in that.' Dyce, in his Remarks, &c. p. 206, while approving of Collier's rendering of 'chief in that' ('the words can be used here in no other sense than chiefly in that), objects to the violent ellipsis which is implied by inserting 'rank and station' after 'select and generous,' and adds: 'During the many hours which I have spent (perhaps wasted) in collating early dramas, I have known four or five editions of a play, though differing from each other materially elsewhere, yet concide in some one most erroneous reading (which was corrected by a fortunately extant MS): the text of that particular place having been once vitiated, the corruption had been retained in all the subsequent impressions. Such is evidently the case here (where there is unluckily no MS Hamlet to refer to); and the probability seems to be, that the strangely impertinent words, 'of a,' found their way into the line, while the eye of the transcriber or compositor, glancing away from it for a moment, was arrested by 'of the' immediately above.' Collier (ed. ii): 'Choice' was formerly not unfrequently spelt chose, and the long f led to the misprinting of 'choice,' first, chiefly, and afterwards chaff. The (MS) substitutes 'choice,' and the whole difficulty is removed, for Polonius says that the French are 'of a most select Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend, and generous choice' in all matters relating to dress. White [see this line and the next above it in Q. Appendix, p. 47. Ed.] Here [in Q.] I believe that we have not only the obvious misprint of 'generall' for 'generous,' and the interpolation of 'of a,' which all editors have supposed, but the accidental repetition in the second line of 'chief' in the first,—a kind of misprint which often occurs in the old texts of these plays. The two errors last named were perpetuated (as errors sometimes unaccountably are), although 'chief' in the first line was changed to 'best.' This reading of White's the Cambridge Editors (Preface, viii) approve of as 'probably' what Sh. had 'originally written,' the corruption in Q. and Qp, which, they say, is clearly due to an error in the transcript from which both were copied, may have arisen from Shakespeare's having 'given between the lines, or in the margin, "of," "chief," meaning these as alternative readings for "in" and "best" in line 73. The transcriber by mistake inserted them in line 74.' Staunton: The slight change of sheaf for 'chiefe' or 'cheeff,' a change for which we alone are answerable, seems to impart a better and more poetic meaning to the passage than any variation yet suggested; and it is supported, if not established, by the following extracts from Ben Jonson: '—Ay, and with assurance, That it is found in noblemen and gentlemen Of the best sheaf.—The Magnetic Lady, III, iv. 'I am so haunted at the court and at my lodging with your refined choice spirits, that it makes me clean of another garb, another sheaf!—Every Man Out of His Humour, II, i.' Ingleby (N. & Qu. 13 Sept. 1856) strongly upholds Staunton's sheaf in the sense of a clique, class, or set in fashionable society. 'And for this meaning we must have recourse to Euphuism. If sheaf be Shakespeare's word, it is not the only instance of Euphuism in Polonius's speech. In line 65, courage of the Qp is Euphuistic for a gallant. It is so used by Scott in The Monastery, and is put into the mouth of that prince of Euphuists, Sir Pierce Scafon. Archers spoke of 'arrows of the first sheaf,' and the Euphuists appropriated the metaphor, and called their friends 'gentlemen of the first sheaf.' Every archer of this day has his best set (a set—12 arrows); and every archer of Shakespeare's day had his first sheaf (a sheaf—24 arrows). Thus: 'In my time, it was the usual practice for soldiers to choose their first sheaf of arrows, and cut those shorter which they found too long,' &c.—Discourse on Weapons.' Ingleby then cites the passages from Ben Jonson afterwards cited by Staunton, and concludes his note with the expression of his belief that the metaphor in the present case, as well as in Every Man Out of His Humour, was taken, not wholly from archery, but from husbandry. H. C. K. (N. & Qu. 11 Oct. 1856) upholds the F, and explains sheaf as a measure by which, according to Skinner, cloth and fine linen were sold. Tschirschwitz thinks that the uniformity of the QpFf in the reading 'of a' is an insuperable objection to any change or omission in that direction. The only suspicious words in the line are 'in that,' at the end of it, because, as he says, we should rather expect them to be written 'therein.' 'In that' he believes to be the beginning of another line, of which the conclusion is lost, but which expressed in substance 'In that they clothe themselves simply.' Accordingly, in his text the line is: In that their show denises extravagance. Mo-
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. 77

And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man. 80

109. Running] This emendation, which is COLLIER'S conj., afterwards corroborated by his (MS), DYCE said he had long been convinced of. White calls it 'almost obvious,' and CLARENDON adopts it as more in accordance with the figure in the preceding line. Pope's emendation JOHNSON supported, believing that wronging had reference not to the phrase, but to Ophelia, the 'it' being the redundant 'it' common enough in poetry, as in Pope's, 'To sinner it or saint it.' THEOBALD (Sl. Rest. p. 25) conjectured ranging, i. e. you, behaving yourself with so much carelessness and liberty, will bring me into contempt, &c. Heath referred wronging to the 'poor phrase,' for 'whoever cracks the wind of anything may surely be said with propriety to wrong or abuse it.' Warburton preferred wringing, i. e. not farther to crack the wind of the phrase by twisting or confounding it. CALDECOTT paraphrases the if by: 'ranging so far, becoming so wildly execute, and running into so many senses of the word tender.' BADHAM (Cam. Essays, 1856, p. 283): Perhaps some readers will think with me that wrong is a corruption of worrying. The same description of persons will probably read in line 118 'extinct in birth' instead of 'extinct in both.' KEIGHTLEY: 'To wrong it thus' is most probably correct. We might read,—supposing the allusion to be to a horse,—To run, as in, You run this humour out of breath, Com. of Err. I, i. CORSON: The Ff are probably right; Polonius has reference to his varying application of the word 'tender.'

115. woodcocks] NAES: Proverbial for a simpleton; probably from the ease with which woodcocks suffer themselves to be caught in springers or snares. The phrase here means 'arts to entrap simplicity.' CLARENDON: Compare Gosson, Apologie for the Schoole of Abuse, p. 72 (ed. Arber): 'When Comedie comes vpon the Stage, Cupide sets vp a Springe for Woodcockes, which are entangled ere they descrie the line, and caught before they mistruste the snare.' HARTING (p. 229): The woodcock for some unaccountable reason was supposed to have no brains, and the name of this bird became a synonym for a fool.

117. MALONE and WHITE believe that some epithet to ‘blazes’ has been omitted.
COLE LiGDE (p. 153): A spondee has, I doubt not, dropped out of the text. Either insert Go to after ‘vows,’ or read, ‘these blazes, daughter, mark you.’ Sh. never introduces a catalectic line without intending an equivalent to the foot omitted in the pauses, or the dwelling emphasis, or the diffused retardation. I do not, however, deny that a good actor might by employing the last-mentioned means, namely, the retardation or solemn knowing drawl, supply the missing spondee with good effect.
But I do not believe that in this or any other of the foregoing speeches of Polonius, Sh. meant to bring out the senility or weakness of that personage’s mind. In the great ever-recurring dangers and duties of life, where to distinguish the fit objects for the application of the maxims collected by the experience of a long life requires no fineness of tact; as in the admonitions to his son and daughter, Pol. is uniformly made respectable. But if an actor were even capable of catching these shades in the character, the pit and the gallery would be discontent at their exhibition. It is to Hamlet that Pol. is, and is meant to be, contemptible, because in inwardness and uncontrollable activity of movement, Hamlet’s mind is the logical contrary to that of Pol., and besides Ham. dislikes the man as false to his true allegiance in the matter of the succession to the crown. WALKER (Vers. p. 206) gives ten or twelve instances from Sh. and other dramatists, among them the present passage, in proof of his assertion that ‘daughter’ is sometimes a trisyllable. ‘It is observable,’ he adds, ‘that in almost all these instances there is a pause—in at least half of them a full stop—after daughter. What was the original form of the word? Compare Soyårnp. In Chaucer, as far as I am acquainted with him, it is uniformly a dissylla-bic.’ In a footnote LETTSOM asks: ‘Quere, when did the guttural become mute in this word? When pronounced, it would have facilitated a trisyllabic pronunciation.’ MORESLEY adopts one of Coleridge’s suggestions, and thinks that the strong irony on the word ‘vows,’ which is spoken with a laugh of contempt, makes it occupy the time of three syllables.

119. a-making] WHITE: There is no purer or more logically correct English

The first thus paraphrases: 'Of the cast, or character, that character of purity, which their garb or assumed expression of passion, bespeaks.' KNIGHT adduces, Temp. II, i, 55, 'eye of green,' to show that an eye was used to express a slight tint. DYCE asks if our early writers ever use 'eye' by itself to denote colour? WHITE cites, as an instance in the affirmative, from 'the old translations of the Bible': 'And the eye of manna was as the eye of bdellium.'—NUMBERS xi, 7; later translations substituting 'colour' for 'eye.' STAUNTON thinks 'eye' may possibly be right. MORRILY: Not of the real stamp which their vesture seems to show.

130. bawds] THEOBALD: What idea can we form of a 'breathing bond,' or of its being sanctified or pious. As amorous vows have just been called 'brokers,' and 'implorers of unholy suits,' the plain and natural sense suggests an easy emendation: bawds. And this correction is strengthened by the concluding phrase, 'the better to beguile.' SCENE IV.] COLERIDGE: The unimportant conversation with which this scene opens is a proof of Shakespeare's minute knowledge of human nature. It is a well-established fact, that, on the brink of any serious enterprise, or event of moment, men almost invariably endeavor to elude the pressure of their own thoughts by turning aside to trivial objects and familiar circumstances; thus the dialogue on the platform begins with remarks on the coldness of the air, and inquiries obliquely connected, indeed, with the expected hour of the visitation, but thrown out in a seeming vacuity of topics, as to the striking of the clock, and so forth. The same desire to escape from the impending thought is carried on in Hamlet's account of, and moralising on, the Danish custom of wassailing; he runs off from the particular to the universal, and in his repugnance to personal and individual concerns, escapes, as it were, from himself in generalisations, and smoothes the impatience and uneasy feelings of the moment in abstract reasoning. Besides this, another purpose is answered; —for by thus entangling the attention of the audience in the nice distinctions and parenthetical sentences of this speech of Hamlet's, Sh. takes them completely by surprise on the appearance of the Ghost, which comes upon them in all the suddenness of its visionary character. Indeed, no modern writer would have dared, like Sh., to have preceded this last visitation by two distinct appearances,—or could have contrived that the third should rise upon the former two in impressiveness and solemnity of interest. But in addition to all the other excellences of Hamlet's speech concerning the wassail-music,—so finely revealing the predominant idealism, the ratiocinative meditativesiveness of his character,—it has the advantage of giving nature and probability to the impassioned continuity of the speech instantly directed to the Ghost. The momentum had been given to his mental activity; the full current of the thoughts and words had set in, and the very forgetfulness, in the fervor...

Of his argumentation, of the purpose for which he was there, aided in preventing the appearance from benumbing the mind. Consequently, it acted as a new impulse, a sudden stroke which increased the velocity of the body already in motion, whilst it altered the direction. The co-presence of Hor., Mar., and Ber. is most judiciously contrived; for it renders the courage of Ham., and his impetuous eloquence, perfectly intelligible. The knowledge,—the unthought-of consciousness,—the sensation,—of human auditors,—of flesh and blood sympathists,—acts as a support and a stimulation a tergo, while the front of the mind, the whole consciousness of the speaker, is filled, yes, absorbed, by the apparition. Add, too, that the apparition itself has by its previous appearances been brought nearer to a thing of this world. This accrescence of objectivity in a Ghost, that yet retains all its ghostly attributes and fearful subjectivity, is truly wonderful.

1. it is] Dyce (Remarks, &c. p. 209): The reading of F, would greatly favour the opinion of those critics who contend that the madness of Ham. was real, not assumed; no man in his sound senses, just after remarking that the air bites severely, would inquire if it were very cold. White: The reading of the F is not entirely unworthy of consideration, because Shakespeare's purpose might well have been to suggest that state of the atmosphere between midnight and sunrise when the air bites severely, although it is not very cold. Horatio's reply is not that it is cold, but that the air has this quality. However, that the Qq are right is shown in the first scene.

2. eager] Wedgwood: French, aigre, eager, sharp, biting; Lat., acer, sharp, severe, vehement, ardent.

6. wont] Abbott, § 5: This is a corruption from wone, from the verb 'wone, Early English, wonian, Anglo-Saxon, 'to dwell.'

6. ordnance] Collier (ed. 2): Perhaps [in explanation of the Q] the theatre had only two pieces belonging to it. Ben Jonson, in his 'Exegeate against Vulcan.'

speaking of the burning of the Globe Theatre in 1613, tells us that the calamity was caused by the discharge of 'two poor chambers.'

8. wake] Dyce (Gloss.) : To hold a late revel. So, in poets of a much earlier date, we find the words watch and watching employed as equivalent to 'debauch at night.'

8. roue] Gifford (The Duke of Milan.—Massinger, vol. i, p. 237, ed. 1805): A 'rouse' was a large glass ('not past a pint,' as Iago says) in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the rest of the company formed a carouse. Barnaby Rich is exceedingly angry with the inventor of the custom, which, however, with a laudable zeal for the honour of his country, he attributes to an Englishman, who, it seems, 'had his brains beat out with a pottlepot' for his ingenuity. There could be no rouse or carouse unless the glasses were emptied. In process of time both these words were used in a laxer sense. They are used in their primal and appropriate signification in 'I've ta'en, since supper, A roue or two too much,' &c.—Knight of Malta. This 'proves Johnson and Steevens are wrong: a rouse has here a fixed and determinate sense. As we should now say, 'a bumper or two too much.'

[See I, ii, 137.]

9. up-spring] Four explanations have been proposed. First: Pope (followed by Hanmer) referred it to the King, and changed it into upstart; Johnson retained 'up-spring,' but adopted in a paraphrase Pope's emendation, 'a blustering upstart.' Nares adds the definition: 'one insolent from sudden elevation.' Singer also prefers this interpretation. Second: Steevens started the correct explanation when he showed by the following passage from Chapman's Alphonsus, that the 'up-spring' was a German dance: 'We Germans have no changes in our dances. An Almain and an upspring, that is all.' Else confirmed it when, in his edition of Chapman's Alphonsus [p. 144], he showed that this 'up-spring' was the ‘Hüpfauf,” the last and consequently the wildest dance at the old German merry-makings. See Ayres's Dramen, ed. by Keller, iv, 2840 and 2846: “Ey, jitt geht erst der hupfauff an. Ey, Iff, jitt kummt erst der hupfauff.” No epitaph could therefore be more appropriate to this drunken dance than Shakespeare's “swaggering.” I need hardly add that ‘up-spring’ is an almost literal translation of the German name. Staunton, while assuming that 'up-spring' refers to a dance, understands 'reels' as a plural noun, qualified by 'up-spring.' [I have always supposed it to be a verb, in the same construction as 'keeps.' Ed.] Third: Steevens, in his note on 'rouse,' having quoted from Decker's Gut's Hornbook: 'Teach me, thou soveraigne skinken, how to take the German's upsy freeze, the Danish rouusa,' &c., Caldecott inferred that the 'up-spring' dance might be like the 'upsy freeze,' both connected with the music and riot of a German debauch. Badham (Cambridge Essays, 1856, p. 283) went
And as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus Bray out.
The triumph of his pledge.

As a step farther, and would substitute for ‘up-spring’ in the present line, _upys freeze._

‘Not that I know,’ he adds, ‘what _upys freeze_ is, or whence it is derived,’ but from Steevens’s citation ‘it is evident that it was a species of drinking.’ ‘Up-spring,’ he _was_, cannot be a dance (as if the descendants of the Berserker would interpulate their serious drinking with such a frivolous thing as a dance!), nor can it mean upstart—i.e. Hamlet’s uncle (a likely epithet to be uttered before two persons, and that when he has not yet seen the Ghost, and has no other feeling towards his uncle but one of vague aversion!).’ Fourth: _Kightley_ ( _Expositor_ , p. 288) says that it is ‘used collectively for the risers from the table, a mode of expression not yet obsolete.’

11. _kettle-drum_] _Douce_ (ii, 205): Thus Cleaveland in his _Fusara, or the Bee Errant_: ‘Tuning his draughts with drowsie hums As Danes carowse by kettle-drums.’

12. _triumph_] _Caldecott_: This may be the victory consequent upon the acceptance of the challenge to this ‘heavy-headed revel,’ or it may be only its pageant and scenario display. _Delius_: It is here the bitterest irony.

12. _custom_] _Caldecott_: The royal custom in Denmark near the date of this play may be seen in Howell’s _Letters_: ‘The King [Christian IV., who reigned from 1588 to 1649] feasted my Lord once, and it lasted from eleven of the clock till towards evening; during which time the King began thirty-five healths. . . .
The King was taken away at last in his chair.’ [Caldecott cites several other authorities to the same effect.] _Hunter_ (ii, 221): The English, in the Tudor reign, appear to have been a remarkably sober people, and the introduction of the vice of drunkenness is attributed by contemporary writers to the connection with the Netherlands.

14. 15. _native . . . manner born_] _Rushton_ ( _Sh. Illust. by Old Authors_ , i, 47):

In the manumission by Henry VIII of two villeins the following words are used:

‘We think it pious and meritorious with God to manumit Henry Knight, a taylor, and John Herle, a husbandman, our natives, as being born within the manor of Stoke Clymysland.’—_Barr. Stats._ 276. Hamlet, therefore, may speak of Denmark, or Elsinore as the manor, himself as _nativus_ , to the manor born, and the ‘heavy-headed revel’ as a custom incident to the manor. ‘Manor’ is here used, probably, in a double sense, as in _Love’s Lab._ , i, 208, where it is contrasted with _manner_. It is of little importance whether the word be spelt _manner_ or _manor_, the mention of one would suggest the other, which is _idem sonans_ , but different in meaning.
More honour’d in the breach than the observance.

16. Dyce (Remarks, p. 210): I once heard an eminent poet maintain that the verse, though it has passed into a sort of proverbial expression, is essentially nonsense: "how," said he, "can a custom be honoured in the breach?" Compare the following line of a play attributed to Jonson, Fletcher, and Middleton: "He kept his promise best that breaks with hell." — The Widow, III, ii. MITFORD (Gen.
Mag. Feb. 1845): The meaning is: "It is a custom that will more honour those that break it than those who observe it;" "honoured" is put for honourable, and transferred to the subject. Hunter (ii, 221): We may regard Sh. as again making an effort, like that in Oth. II, iii, 79 (and efforts by a genius such as his are not lost), to free his countrymen from so baneful a vice.

17. east and west] Johnson: That is, "makes us traduced east and west of other nations." [Not as Warburton says, "this revel from morn till night."]

17-38. As these lines are not in Q, MALONE supposes that they were omitted or left of deference to Anne of Denmark, the queen of James I. KNIGHT, on the oth-hand, ingeniously conjectures that they were added in Q, in order to qualify the harsh description of royal riot in lines 8-12. A trait of Shakespeare’s character may be herein indicated: he would not suppress the lines offensive to royalty, because the description given in them was true; he only made it less severe by adding a tolerant exposition of the mode in which one ill quality destroys the lustre of man;
the good ones. After the queen’s death the passage was omitted in the Ff. ELTHE believes that they were erased by Sh., but restored by the printer of Q, in order to justify his title-page, wherein it was stated that the play was "enlarged to as much again as it was," and is inclined to believe them spurious.

18. of] For other instances of "of" used for by, see III, i, 154; IV, ii, 12; Mac.

19. drunkards] Steevens: And well our Englishmen might; for in 1604 the following mention is made of a Dane in London, in Looke to it: For Ille Stabbe
(by Samuel Rowlands, p. 21, ed. Hunterian Club): "You that will drink *Rynahl unto death: The Dane, that would carouse out of his Boote."

19. swinish] Hunter (ii, 221): This seems to allude to some parody on the style of the kings of Denmark, which bore allusion to this habit. CLARENDON: Could Sh. have had in his mind any pun upon "Sweyn," which was a common name of the kings of Denmark?

24. mole] Heath: A blemish of any kind, exactly corresponding to ‘stamp of one defect.’ In line 31. Malone: Compare: For marks describ’d in men’s nativity are nature’s faults, not their own infamy.—R. of L. 538. Theobald (S. Rest. p. 33) suggested mould, i.e. ‘when nature is unequally and viciously moulded, when my complexion is too predominant.’ But he did not repeat it in his edition. Shir. Herschlag (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1109) adds this passage as one of the proofs that King James is designated under the character of Hamlet, and that the vicious mole of nature referred to James’s aversion to the sight of a drawn dagger, which was supposed to be derived from the shock his mother experienced, before his birth, at seeing Rizzio assassinated.

25. As] Walker (Crit. i, 127): ‘As is here used, I think, not in the sense of for instance, but in that of namely, to wit; it expresses an enumeration of particulars, not a selection from them by way of example. This is a frequent—perhaps, indeed, the one exclusive—signification of as when employed in this construction; as in 3 Hen. VI; V, vii, 7. ‘Two Cliffs, as the father and son.’ This is the true construction of as in a number of passages, where it has been, or is likely to be, mistaken for the modern usage.

27. complexion] Singer: This formerly meant the constitutions or affections of the body. Clarendon: In the old medical language there were four complexes, or temperaments; the sanguine, melancholy, choleric, and phlegmatic.

Sh. frequently uses the adjective of quality instead of the substantive of the thing. Elsewhere speaking of worth, Sh. delights to consider it as a Quality that adds Weight to a person. See All’s Well, III, iv, 31, and ‘From whose so many weights of baseness cannot A dram of worth be drawn.’—Cym. III, v, 88. HEATH: I should rather suspect Sh. might have written 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft eat out,' &c. But granting a little farther departure from the printed text, I should think it still more probable that the true reading is: 'Doth all the noble substance soil with doubt.' That is: A dram of base alloy stains all the noble substance of his virtues with the suspicion that they are mere tinsel appearances only, and not of the true sterling standard. CAPELL (Notes, &c. i, 126), after citing Heath with approval, adds, 'But it should seem, from the comment that the same author makes upon his second amendment, that the line stands in need of a substantive, following 'of' to perfect the sense of it. And this, in truth, is the light in which the editor has view'd the corruption all along; that some word was slip out of the copy, and 'out' changed to 'a doubt' by the printer's ingeniousness: the vacancy cannot be fill'd better than by the word in possession; and the line may be cur'd of it's baldness by no very great licence, the change of 'all' into eat; after which, the comment that has been given above [Heath's] is both a just and a perfect one.' [Which means that Capell would read the line 'Doth eat the noble substance of worth out.' In Capell's list of 'Various Readings of Hamlet' he cites the reading of Q, thus: of eale 4*.a. (f. ill.) This, I presume, indicates, what the Cam. Edd. ascribe to him, the conjecture of ill for eale.' Hereby Capell anticipated JENNENS, who merely states that he ventures to read: 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance of good out, To his own scandal.'] In the Var. of 1773, STEEVENS says: 'Mr Holt reads, The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft adopti, &c. I would read Doth all the noble substance (i.e. the sum of good qualities) oft do out.' 'To do a thing out is to efface, or obliterate anything in drawing.' Perhaps we should say, 'To its own scandal.' [Vide infra, Steevens, 1793.] DAVIES (Dramatic Misc. 1784, iii, 10): The very trifling alteration of adding a letter to one word, and the changing two letters for one in another, will restore to us the original reading, 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft work out,' &c. When I read this proposed emendation to the reverend and learned Mr Robertson, he not only concurred with me, but assured me he had himself made the same amendment. The apostle James hath a sentiment very similar to the present passage; 'For, whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.' [In the Var. 1785, S[tephen] W[eston] proposes the same emendation. Ed.] MASON (1785): I offer as an amendment (which is at least as near the old text as any yet proposed, and which is supported by line 35), 'Doth all the noble substance of 't corrupt.' MALONE (1790): 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance of worth doute, To,' &c. To doute signified in Shakespeare's time, and yet signifies in Devonshire and other western counties, to do out, to efface, to extinguish. Thus they say, doute the candle, doute the fire,' &c., just as don signifies do on [or off, do off—STEEVENS]. 'Doute' having been written by the transcriber doute, and the word 'worth' having been inadvertently omitted, probably the line, in the copy for the press, stood: Doth all the noble substance of doubt. The editor or printer of the Q3, finding the line too short, inserted the indefinite article, without attending to the context. Theobald's insertion of worth is fully justified by his citation from Cymbeline. [Malone, in Var. 1785, proposed 'By his own scandal,' but did not repeat it in his own edition. Ed.] STEEVENS [1793. Vide supra, Steevens, 1773]: I now think we should read: 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft doute,' &c., for surely it is needless to say—'the noble substance of worth doute,' because the idea of worth is comprehended in the epithet noble. N. B. This improvement I owed, about four years ago, to the late Rev. Henry Homer. Rann (1794?): 'Doth all, &c. oft corrupt: oft work out: eat out: By it's own scandal.' Martinus Scriblerus (Explanations and Emendations of Some Passages in the Text of Shakespeare, Edinburgh, 1814): I suppose there was a shifting of types from the upper to the lower line, and read thus: 'The dram of doubt Doth all the noble substance oft amend To,' &c. That is, the dram of doubtful or base metal doth often, in the operation of annealing, cause the whole substance to become durably as base as itself. Whether this emendation will be made out by a comparison with the processes used in the arts, I know not, as everything connected with chemical science, or any branch of philosophy, appeareth to me too insignificant to bestow upon it one moment's attention. Zachary Jackson says that he has endeavored to give the passage some sense, but cannot speak with that perfect confidence which he does in reference to 'most of my restorations.' Boswell (1821): A clear meaning is afforded by Holt's emendation, if we take 'substance' as a nominative: 'The noble substance doth oft bring disgrace upon itself by adopting the dram of base.' If this interpretation be rejected, I would prefer to suppose that doubt means to bring into doubt or suspicion, as to fear means to create fear; to pale is to make pale. Yet I prefer Holt's change. Caldewcott merely enumerates, with approval, the various changes which preceding edd. have made, and which he adopts. [See Text. Notes.] Singer (ed. i): 'The dram of bale Doth all the noble substance often doubt To,' &c. I see no reason why doubt should be substituted for 'doubt.' Boswell's interpretation of 'doubt' is just. I have ventured to read bale (i. e. evil) as nearer to the reading of the first edition. Stearns (Sh. Treat. p. 373) adopted this reading of Singer's, and explains it as a reference to the commerce in drugs, in which a great deal of adulteration is practiced; for the word bale we have now only the word alley. Collier: It is easy to see how ill might be misprinted sale, and 'often doubt' of a doubt; the compositor having taken the passage by his ear only: indeed, a stronger proof of the kind could hardly be pointed out. Delius: 'The dram of bale Doth all the noble substance off and out To,' &c. In the old edd. 'off' is constantly used for of, just as doubt for dout... In MS and out, run into one word, would be readily mistaken for a doubt, especially if an abbreviation were used instead of and. The sense is: The dram of evil doth off [i. e. puts off] and doth out [i. e. puts out] all the noble substance,' &c. A. E. B[rax] (N. & Q. 21 Feb. 1852): Ease and sale so nearly resemble each other, and the subsequent transition to base is so extremely obvious, and so consistent with the sense, that there can hardly be any plausible ground for the rejections of base in favour of ill. Moreover, base is the natural antagonist of 'noble' in the next line. Now, in what does the dram (i. e. an indefinitely small quantity, as gram is used now-a-days) of base affect all the noble substance? Sh. says it renders it doubtful or suspicious. 'Doubt' in this place is not a verb, but a noun substantive. The chief hindrance now to a perfect meaning consists in the restriction of doth to a mere expletive. Let this restriction be removed, by conferring upon doth the value of an effective verb, and the difficulty disappears: thus, the base doubt to the noble, i. e. imparts doubt to it, or renders it doubtful. We say a man's good actions do him credit; why not also, his bad ones do him doubt? There now remains of a to be amended. I suggest offer; it is almost identical (in sound at least) with the original, and it materially assists in giving a much clearer applica-

To his, &c., merely a substitution of letters. PERIEGUS BIBLIOPHILUS (N. & Qu. 17 Aug. 1852): As the least deviation from the old copies, I prefer 'The dram of base Doth, all the noble substance d'er, a doubt, To his own scandal,' & c. d'oth cast a doubt over all the noble substance, bring into suspect all the noble qualities by the leaven of one dram of baseness. SINGER (ed. ii): Most probably Sh. wrote: Doth all the noble substance oft adoubt.' Using the word adoubt for doubt in its active sense of to bring into doubt or suspicion. We have numerous old words of similar form, and in Latin dubito is written adhibito by Cicero and others. It is evident that doubt could not have been the word, for the meaning is "The dram of base renders all the noble substance doubtful or suspicious," not that it extinguishes it altogether. I read base as suggested by Q4, from its more direct opposition to noble. [Singer's text follows Q4, except that base is substituted for 'eale.'] DRYCE (ed. i): 'Often' [in Steevens's reading] is very questionable, because, in all probability, 'of' in the Q4 is a mistake for 'oft,' and secondly, as LETTSOM observes to me, the words "To his own scandal" are fatal to the reading "doubt," for if that alteration be right they are superfluous. A verb, he adds, "I should think must lurk under the corruption "a doubt" or "doubt," with the signification of turn, pervert, corrupt, or the like. Shakespeare's meaning evidently is that a little leaven leavens the whole lump—that one vice will ruin an otherwise perfect character. Mason's conjecture was unknown to the Rev. J. MITFORD when he wrote to me as follows: 'I would read "Doth all the noble substance oft corrupt."' In the Devonshire dialect, to 'eale' is to 'reproach'; it may be asked, then, Did Sh. (who occasionally has provincialisms) write here 'the dram of eale' in the sense of 'the dram of reproach'? for my own part, I hardly think so. WHITE: I leave this grossly-corrupted passage unchanged, because none of the attempts to restore it seem to me to be even worth recording, and I am unable to better them. But it has occurred to me that perhaps the corruption lurks in a part of the passage hitherto unsuspected, and that 'Doth' is either a misprint of 'Hath,' or has the sense of 'accomplishes.' F. A. LEWIS (N. & Qu. 27 Dec. 1862): 'Eale,' in its real form, must have contained a sense opposite to 'noble,' and for that purpose I find no better word than vile. 'A doubt' I understand as a misprint for a draught; for Ham. had just spoken about drinking, and had just used the word 'draughts.' After that I should like to change the word 'Doth' into Turms. NICHOLS [Notes on Sh. 1, 25]: Eale is the old-fashioned mode of spelling ail=ailment, pronounced ale. 'Doth' is not the auxiliary verb, but the verb itself, the 3d pers. sing. pres. tense of to do, which here means: 'to make anything what it is not,' as, 'to do him dead'—so in Johnson. 'Doubt' is the means whereby that change is effected, of and by formerly being used indifferently as a sign of the ablative. Hence the text of Q4 means that 'the dram of eale will, by a doubt (i.e. by the doubt that it will create as to a man's sincerity) do (i.e. convert) all this noble substance to his own scandal, laying him open to the charge of hypocrisy. [Nichols repeated this note substantially in The Athenæum, 18 Aug. 1866. Ed.] INGLEBY (op. Staunton): 'Of a doubt' is a mis-
The drum of base Doth all the noble substance of a pound to its own vileness?" We by no means pretend that pound was the actual word misrendered 'doubt'; it is inserted merely because it occurs in opposition to 'drum' in a line of Quarles's Emblems, b. ii, E 7,—Where ev'ry drum of gold contains a pound of dross,—and because it is extremely probable such such antithesis was intended here. So in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. i, c. iii, s. 30.—A drum of sweete is worth a pound of sower. Swyfen Jervis (Proposed Emendations, &c. 1860, p. 23): Read, The dram of evil Doth all the noble substance oft outdo, To, &c. Compare Cor. ii, i, 150: 'So heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate.'—Par. Lost. 'Wherein the graver had a strife With nature, to outdo the life.'—Jonson.

In Chamber's Household Sk. is the following note: 'We have adopted oft subsede [for 'of a doubt'], suggested by Mr Swyfen Jervis, and thus supported.—Son. iii, 6; and All's Well, V, iii, 217.' Bailey (ii, 2): For 'eale' read evil; for 'of a doubt' read oft weigh drm. 'Weigh, in some of the old copies of Hamlet, is spelt way.' Compare Rich. III: V, iii, 153; Timon V, i, 154. Corson (Jottings, &c. p. 13, 1874): All the difficulty of the passage is removed, I think, by understanding 'noble,' not as an adjective, as all the commentators have understood, qualifying 'substance,' but as a noun opposed to 'eale,' and the object of 'substance,' a verb of which 'doth' is its auxiliary. Thus: 'the dram of eale doth all the noble, substance of (i. e., 'with,' a sense common in the English of the time) a doubt (which works) to his own scandal.' 'Substance' is used in the sense of 'imbue with a certain essence;' 'this' is a neuter genitive, standing for 'noble,' and = 'its.' The dram of ill transubstantiates the noble, essences it to its own scandal. (In regard to the uses of 'of' and 'to,' see Abbott, §§ 171, 186.) The use of 'substance,' in the sense of 'essence,' was, of course, sufficiently common, and had been for more than two centuries, to justify the interpretation given. In Much. I, v, 48, we have 'sightless substances' = 'invisible essences,' 'sightless' being used objectively. 'Being of one substance with the Father.'—Book of Common Prayer. Chaucer, in The Prologue of the Nonne Preestes Tale (l. 1489 of Tyrwhitt's edition, I. 1628 of Wright's), uses the word to express the essential character or nature of a man. The Host objects to the Monk's Tale, as being too dull for the occasion; and, that the fault may not be thought to lie in himself, says, 'And wel I wot the substance is in me, If eny thing shal wel reported be.' That is, I am so substanted, so constituted, so tempered, such is my cast of spirit, that I can appreciate and enjoy, as well as the next man, a good story well told. Whether 'substance' can be found, in this sense, as a verb, matters not. The free functional application of words which characterized the Elizabethan English, allowed, as every English scholar knows, of the use of any noun, adjective, or neuter verb, as an active verb. This interpretation I communicated in the main to N. & Qu. [4 Oct. 1862]; but I did not then recognize an important element in it, that the pronoun 'his' is a neuter genitive, standing for 'noble' used as a noun. Arkwright (Shakespeare's Editors, &c. 1865, p. 6) thus quotes the passage: 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance often

SHAKESPEARE

HALLIWELL: This passage appears to be hopelessly corrupt, no emendation yet proposed being in the least degree satisfactory, nor have I any plausible suggestion of my own to offer. DYCE (ed. ii).: The dram of evil Doth all the noble substance oft debase To &c. For this reading, now inserted in the text, I alone am answerable. CLARKE: That doubt and 'dout' were often printed the one for the other, and that the two words afforded scope for quibbling play upon them, is seen by the opening jest in A C. Merry Tale, 1567: 'I never harde tell of more douter but twayn, that is to say, dout the candell and dout the fyre.' H. D. (Athenaenum, 18 Aug. 1866): Hamlet so emphatically insists that one little drop always corrupts the whole mass that he would not wind up by saying it often does so. Read, therefore, 'The dram of ill Doth...overdout.' ELZE (Athenaenum, 11 Aug. 1866) thinks a very near approach to the text, together with an unobjectionable sense, may be had by reading 'the dram of evil...often doub To' &c. J. D. M. (Athenaenum, 24 Nov. 1866): The sentence is simply incomplete. I would put a dash after 'scandal.' If completed, it might read 'To his own scandal taint.' KEIGHTLEY (Expositor, 288): I read evil for 'eale,' and for 'of a doubt' out o' doub, or perhaps, 'out of a doubt.' The sentence, we may see, is not complete, and it should also be recollected that the language of the whole speech is involved, as if the speaker were thinking of something else, and merely talking against time. CARTWRIGHT (New Readings in Shak., &c. 1866, p. 37): For 'eale' read leaven, for 'of a doubt,' of a dough. PROWETT (N. & Qu. 25 Sept. 1869): Is it not possible that there was such a word as 'eale,' and that it was identical with the 'esil' in V, i, 264, meaning vinegar? In that case Sh. may perhaps have written 'Doth all the noble substance over-clout.' In the next scene, the possetting of the blood by poison is described like 'eager droppings into milk.' Thus Sh. here means that the small quantity of vinegar or other acid matter over-clouts, or curdles over, the whole of the substance to which it is added, so as to impart its own scandalous character to that substance. He has just used the word 'o'ereleavens.' Clout, to clot or curdle, is a well-known provincial expression. The unfamiliar word, clout, was mistaken by the eye for dout, and over, by the ear for 'of a.' THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE ON SHAKESPEARIAN GLOSSARIES IN THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (N. & Qu. 23 Oct. 1869): Evil is used by Elizabethan writers, and by Sh. himself, as a monosyllable, and it might, then, by a mistake of the ear, easily have been written as pronounced: eale. Again, the verb dout is used not only in its literal sense of do out, but in the secondary meaning of obscure, eclipse, prevent the manifestation of, as by Laertes in IV, vii, 192. This secondary sense very much does away with the force of Lettsom's objection to dout. Read, then, 'The dram of e'il Doth all the noble substance often dout To' &c. W. M. ROSSETTI (N. & Qu. 30 Oct. 1869): Maplett, in his Green Forest, 1567, says: 'The eel being killed and addressed in wine, whosoever chaunceth to drinke of that wine so used shall ever afterward lothe wine.' May not wine thus treated have been technically termed eel (eale)? Read, then: The dram of eel Doth, &c., i.e. the dram of eel-dressing (vitiated wine) doth often doubt (bring into suspicion and disrepute) the noble substance (of pure wine) to the scandal of the said substance. On further reflection (N. & Qu. 4 Dec. 1869), a simpler meaning for 'the dram of eale' may be assigned, viz.: 'An extremely small weight, or quantity, even the sixteenth part of an ounce, of the eel-fish,' taking dram in its quantitative sense. J. WETHERILL (Athenaenum, 20 Nov. 1869): suggests 'The dram of e'il Doth all the [36. 'The dram of eale,' &c.]
noble substance oft traduce To his own scandal,' because Bacon, in his Ninth Essay, says that 'as infection spreadeth upon that which is sound and tainteth it, so this evil eye traduceth even the best actions thereof, and turneth them into an ill odour,' Rushton (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 93, 1871): 'Dram of eale' may be a misprint, or abbreviation, of dram of hellebore, or 'ele-bore,' which old authors speak of as being very poisonous; Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, says: 'One dramme of Eleborus ransacks everyone.' Daniel (Notes, &c. 1870, p. 73): I propose—'the dram of meal Doth all the noble substance of it doubt: So this one scandal....' If the four mysterious letters, e a l e, may be formed by the addition of an m into the word meale (the old spelling of meal), the change of the preceding word, 'dram,' to bram is obvious, and we have a sentence singularly in accordance with the argument of Hamlet's speech, which he illustrates by the homely simile of bram doubting or discrediting all the noble substance of the meal. If the dram of meal be accepted, the change of 'of e' to of it hardly needs apology. In So, the S being next the T in the printer's case, the error would be easily accounted for. His and these are so frequently confounded in the old copies, that no one would hesitate to correct where the sense of a passage required the change. The corruption of one into own' probably arose from the similarity in sound of the two words. The simile of bram and meal seems to have been a favorite one with Elizabethan writers. Sh. uses it twice elsewhere, in Cym. IV, ii, 27; Cor. III, i, 322. Hudson (1870): 'The dram of vile Doth all the noble substance oft abate To,' &c. I prefer vile as more likely to have been mis-printed 'eale,' and I have ventured to change 'of' into of, and 'a doubt' into abate, which was often used by old writers in the sense of cast down or depress. Perhaps attaint would give a slightly more congruous sense. Miles (Review of Hamlet, p.
16, 1870): 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance throw in doubt' seems to be the meaning of the line. Robert Roaster (Sunday Dispatch, Phila. 12 Jan.
1873): For 'often dout' read of endow, the final t of dout' was inserted by the printer, misled by the occurrence of the letter at the beginning of the next line.
Endow was often used in Shakespeare's time for endue, which is rendered by Bailey
'to supply,' 'to qualify.' The meaning then is The dram of base doth often qualify all the noble substance To its own scandal. Morerly: The passage must surely be read: 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance ever doubt To,' &c. Hudson's forthcoming edition will read, 'The dram of leaven Doth all the noble substance of en sour To,' &c., a reading suggested by a passage in Bacon's Henry the Seventh:
'And as a little leaven of new distaste doth commonly sour the whole lump of former merits, the King's wit.' &c. F. J. Furnivall suggests oft adote in place of
'o of a doubt,' because adote meant both to grow silly and to drive silly. For the latter sense, see Gower's Confessio Amantis, III, ii, as quoted in Müller's Wörterbuch, 'The most wise ben otherwhile of love adoted,' i.e. made fools, besotted.
John Davies (N. & Q. 11 Mar. 1876) repeats Dyce's remark, that 'eale,' with 'the meaning of reproach, is still used in the western counties.'
Strachey (p. 44): Hamlet's generalizations are really drawn from the excessive brooding over his own character and circumstances, and only afterwards applied to the men and things about him. It is plainly he himself who is the original of this his description of the man in whom either nature or circumstances have unduly developed some one tendency of the character, to the injury of the proper and rational balance and harmony of the whole; and who, in consequence of this one

The meaning is, not that Hamlet attributes any intents to the Ghost, but that the Ghost’s appearance is to him prognostic of certain issues or events; ‘thy’ is the personal, and not the possessive, adjective pronoun; in other words, it is used objectively.

45. Royal Dane] Pye (p. 312): The change of punctuation proposed in the following anonymous observation, published in the St. James's Chronicle, 15 Oct.
1761, is so convincing that I shall without hesitation adopt it: ' [To put a colon after "Dane"] seems to be a strange climax (if not an anti-climax). But a slight alteration in the pointing will remove all objections, preserve the beauty of the climax, and perhaps give an additional force to the whole passage. Thus, "I'll call thee Hamlet, King, Father,—Royal Dane, O answer me." The climax naturally and beautifully ends with the endearing appellation of "Father." He then addresses the Ghost by the general appellation, "Royal Dane, O answer me." This seems the criticism of no mean critic. [Mr Edwin Booth has informed me that his father always spoke the line thus, and that he himself has always so spoken it. I believe Mr Irving has also adopted it. To me it is unquestionably the true reading, and I have not hesitated to punctuate the text accordingly. Ed.]

47. canoniz'd] Warrington: Bones over which the rites of septime have been performed, or which were buried according to the canon. Blakeway: The accent is on the second syllable. [See Walker, Vers. 197; Abbott, § 491.]

47-50. Johnson has a long note on these lines, called forth by Warrington's superfluous change of 'hearsed in earth,' and sums up the whole sentence in:
'Why dost thou appear, whom we know to be dead?' Heath (p. 531): By the expression hearsed in death is meant, shut up and secured with all those precautions which are usually practised in preparing dead bodies for septime, such as the winding-sheet, shroud, coffin, &c. So that death is here used, by a metonymy of the antecedent for the consequent, for the rites of death, such as are generally esteemed due, and practised with regard to dead bodies.

48. cerements] Clarendon: Q, here reads 'ceremonies.' As this copy is probably derived from short-hand notes taken at the play, it would seem to show that 'cerements' was pronounced as a trisyllable. [Does it not rather show that 'ceremonies' was pronounced as a trisyllable: 'ceremonies'? and is it not an additional proof of what Staunton and Walker affirm in reference to the monosyllabic pronunciation of core in ceremony, ceremonious, ceremonials? See Macb. III, iv, 36.
Ed.] See Congreve: 'Cerat: A Plaister made of Waxe, Gummes, &c., and certaine oyles; wee also, call it, a Cerot or Searecloth.'
Wherein we saw thee quietly in-urn'd,
Hath oped his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again. What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisits thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature

49. in-urn'd Dyce: In my Few Notes, &c., p. 137, I remarked: 'Perhaps the reading of the Q4 is preferable, because in-urn'd implies that the body had been reduced to ashes,'—a remark which I now wish to recall. Compare Cor. V, vi, 145.

53. Revisits Walker (Crit. ii, 128): Quare, in cases where st would produce extreme harshness, and where at the same time the old copies have s, whether we ought not to write the latter? [The text which I have adopted is my answer. Ed.]

54. we Theobald, Caldecott, and Clarendon say that in strict grammar we should be here used; but Walker (Crit. i, 58) evidently, as Lettsom notes, connect we fools with 'That,' and so does Monckey in his excellent paraphrase: 'What may it mean that we with our blind nature (are made) so horribly to shake our composure of spirit with thoughts beyond the reach of our souls?' adding, 'This random connexion of the clause suits well with the headlong impetuosity of the speech.' On the same grammatical grounds Tschirschwitz reads, 'So horribly to shake.' Abbott, § 216, thus explains 'and we': After a conjunction and before an infinitive we often find i, thou, &c., where in Latin we should have 'me,' 'te,' &c. The conjunction seems to be regarded as introducing a new sentence, instead of connecting one clause with another. Hence the pronoun is put in the nominative, and a verb is, perhaps, to be supplied from the context. So too, we have we for as in 111, ii, 231, since it stands quasi-independently at some distance from the governing word, 'touches.'

54. fools Warburton: Intimating that we are only kept (as formerly fools in a great family) to make sport for nature, who lies hid only to mock and laugh at us for our vain searches into her mysteries. Mason (p. 378): A paraphrase of the

DYCE interprets it in ‘deprives our own sight.’—Beau. & Fl. The Maid in the Mill, IV, iii, 8. WALKER (Crit. iii, 261): That is, depose reason from her throne in your mind. ‘Deprive’ is here synonymous with depose. LETTSOM (Foot-note to the foregoing): I have observed two examples of this use of the word in R. of L.
1186 and 1752. Again, ‘And join together to deprive my breath.’—Woman Kill’d with Kindness, Dodsley vii, p. 261; ‘What son, what comfort that she (Fortune) can deprive?’—Marston, Antonio & Mellida. Part i, III, i. ABBOTT, § 200: ‘Deprive,’ meaning to ‘take away a thing from a person,’ like ‘rid,’ can dispense with ‘of’ before the impersonal object. This explains the present passage: ‘which might take away your controlling principle of reason.’ Compare also the tendency (§ 290) to convert neuter verbs into active verbs. See also I, iii, 51.

73. sovereignty of reason] WARBURTON: The same as sovereign or supreme reason. Thus, ‘At once to betray the sovereignty of reason in my soul.’—King Charles, Iam Bassiike. CAPELL (i, 126): Deprive you of the command of your reason, or that sovereignty which you now exercise over it. STEEVENS: The phrase does not signify, to deprive your princely mind of rational powers, but to take away from you the command of your reason, by which man is governed. GIFFORD (Johnson’s New Inn,
p. 352, ed. 1816): ‘Sovereignty’ here is merely a title of respect, and the whole phrase means neither more nor less than to deprive your lordship, or your honour, or your highness, of reason. [Aliquando dormiit, &c. As HUNTER says, Hamlet was no sovereign. ED.] CALDECOTT: Dispossess the sovereignty of your reason
So that he throws his image forcibly before his reader, Sh. leaves it to him to arrange his pronouns and articles, and grammatically thread his meaning. Compare ‘nobility of love,’ I, ii, 118. For instances where pronominal and other adjectives are placed before a whole compound noun instead of, as they strictly should be, before the second of the two nouns, see ABBOTT, § 423. So ‘your cause of distemper,’ III.

Stage Direction] Owing to the length of time that elapses before the companions of Ham, rejoin him, DELIUS thinks it unlikely that the dialogue with the Ghost took place on the same Platform where Ham. broke loose from his friends. Tschischwitz changes the scene to 'A Wilderness,' because 'Ham. must have followed the Ghost a long distance, since he refuses to go farther. His question also, 'Whither wilt thou lead me?' shows that, despite his courage, horror is beginning to creep over him; and at the close of the scene the Ghost speaks from under the ground.' The earliest change in this stage direction that I can find is in Schröder's adaptation of the play for the Hamburg theatre, in 1781. Here the scene is laid in 'A Graveyard with the Church in the background.'
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames Must render up myself.

_Ham._  Alas, poor ghost!

6. bound] DELIUS: Hamlet uses the word in the sense of ready addressed [past. part. of Old Norse _bainm_,—see Wedgwood], the Ghost uses it as the past participle of the verb to bind.

11. to fast in] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 45) conjectured that we should read: _vest_, but afterwards in his correspondence with his 'most affectionate friend,' Worbritton (see Nichols, Lit. Hist. vol. ii, p. 559), he said, 'sed fasti possint,' and suggested instead, _confined fast_; presumably he withdrew them both, since he does not allude to them in his ed., where he says: The expression is purely metaphorical, for _fasting_ could be no great punishment for a _Spirit_. According to the Roman Catholic religion, _fasting_ purifies the soul here, as the _fire_ does in the _Purgatory_ here alluded to; the soul must be purified either by fasting here or by burning hereafter. HEATH and JOHNSON both conjectured _to fasting_, which the former considered justified by the next line, the meaning being: _fires_ which were to last till the purgation was completed; and which the latter interpreted as unremitting and unconsumed. COLLIER'S (MS) has the same. SMITH [cited by Steevens]: Chaucer has a similar passage with regard to the punishments of hell, _Parsons Tale_, p. 291, ed. Tyrwhitt, 4to: 'And moreover the mise of helle shall be in defaute of mete and drink.' STEEVENS: _N. & N._ in _Fierce Penniless his Supplication to the Devil_, 1595, has the same verse: 'Whether it be a place of horror, stench and darkness, where men see meat, but can get none, or are ever thirsty.' &c. So likewise at the conclusion of an ancient pamphlet called _The Wyll of the Devyll_, bl. l. no date: 'Thou shalt lye in frost and _fire_ With sickness and hunger,' &c. But for the foregoing examples, I should have supposed we ought to read, 'to _waste_ in fires.' MASON: _As_ spirits were supposed to feel the same desires and appetites that they had on _earth._
Till the soul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,
Thy knotted and combined locks to part
And each particular hair to stand an end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine:
But this eternal blazon must not be

18. knotted] knotty Fi, Rowe, Pope, porpentine] porcupine Q'76, Rowe Sing. El. Sta. Clarke, Hal.

The word "fast" might be considered as one of the punishments inflicted on the wicked. Dyce (ed. i.): If the old text be wrong, and certainly the passages in Chaucer, &c., as given above, do not fully establish it, Steevens's conj. of waste in is perhaps the most probable alteration yet proposed. [This remark about Steevens's conj. is omitted in Dyce (ed. ii), and citations from Chaucer, &c. alone are given.] White: These were those of Purgatory, in which the Ghost was confined for the day only, and so were not lasting in any sense. "Fast" may be used here in its radical sense of religious observance, and without any allusion to abstinence from food, or there may be a reference to the old notion contained in the extract from Chaucer. Tschischwitz: Lasting cannot be right, because the Ghost was in Purgatory, nor is fast in any better, since the old king wanders about outside his prison-house, and could, if he chose, satisfy his hunger. Clearly, the true opposite to 'walk' is what I have adopted in my text, 'confined fast.' [See Theobald supra. ED.]

14. burnt and purged] Farmer: Thus Gawain Douglas, in his translation of Aen. vi, 740, says that 'it is a nefedful thing to suffer pain and torment, . . . some in the wyndis, sum under the water, and in the fire uthir sum. 'Till the mony vices Contrakkit in the corps be done away And purgit.'

17. 18. Make . . . start . . . to] For the omission and insertion of 'to' in the same sentence, see Abbott, § 350, and 1, v, 178.
19. an end] For instances of nouns, adjectives, and participles with the prefix a, see Abbott, § 24, where it is shown that a represents some preposition, as 'in,' 'on,' 'of,' &c., contracted by rapidity of pronunciation, and takes an n before a vowel for euphony. See also § 182, and of this play, I, iii, 119; II, ii, 466; III, i, 165; III, iv, 122; and Macb. V, v, 49. Eastwood and Wright (Bible Word-Book, p. 2): This prefix a- or an- is generally said to be a corruption of the Anglo-Saxon particle em, but more probably the two are essentially identical, and only different dialectical forms of the same. In many instances the two forms remain side by side, as in aboard and on-board, aground and on ground.

of 'an inaccurate use of words in Sh., some of them owing to his imperfect scholarship (imperfect, I say, for he was not an ignorant man, even on this point), and others common to him with his contemporaries.'

21. blazon] CALDECOTT: 'Such promulgation of the mysteries of eternity must not be made to beings of a day.' WEDGWOOD: 1. To blow abroad, to spread news, to publish. 2. To portray armorial bearings in their proper colours. MOBERLY:
'A blaze' is a white mark upon a horse; whence to blaze trees is to notch them with an axe, so as to mark the way back. To 'blazon,' therefore, means properly to-mark out; hence 'to reveal.'

24. O God!] SEYMOUR (ii, 159) considers this as an unnecessary interpolation of some actors; so also the Ghost's repetition of 'Murder' in line 27.

27. For this line TSCHISCHWITZ substitutes the two corresponding lines of Q.

30. meditation] WARBURTON: This word is consecrated by the mysticks to signify that flight of mind which aspires to the enjoyment of the supreme Good. So-that the two most rapid things in nature are here employed: the ardent of divine d and human passion in an enthusiast and a lover. JOHNSON: This is so ingenious, that I hope it is just. CALDECOTT: That is, 'as the course and process of thought generally.' We have 'I'll make him fly swifter than meditation,' in the Prologue to Witty Beguiled. It was not improbably, therefore, a common saying.

31. sweep] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 50) conjectured swoop, not only from the fitness of the word, but from its use in MACH. IV, iii, 219. He did not repeat the conj. in his edition.

32. shouldst] For instances of 'should' where we now use would, see ABBOTT, § 322, or MACH. III, vi, 19.
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,
Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear:
'Tis given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forged process of my death
Rankly abused; but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father’s life

32. fat weed] TSCHISCHWITSCH: If Sh. had any particular plant in mind, it must have been the asphodel, with its numerous bulbs, thick sown over the meadows of the lower regions. Lucian (perc. πένθος, 5) thus introduces this plant in connection with the Lethean draft: περασώδεντας δὲ τὴν λίμνην καὶ τὸ θάνατον, λεπίνην ὑποδέχεται μὲνες, τῷ πορφίρῳ κατάφυτος, καὶ ποτὸν μνήμης πολέμων.

33. root] CAPELL (i, 127): The moderns have sunk a great beauty by not following the Fl; for in ‘roots’ is an idea of action that diminishes the comparison’s beauty, which consists in inaction. STEEVENS (quoted by DYCE in his ed. i) paraphrases Capell, and adds: This dull root pluck’d from Lethe flood.’—The Humorous Lieutenant, IV, iii, Beau. & Fl. vol. vi, ed. Dyce. CALDSCOTT: We have the phrase [‘rot’] again in Ant. & Cire. I, iv, 47: ‘To rot itself with motion.’ KNIGHT: Whiter, in his Etymological Dict., speaking of this passage, in connection with the theory of ease belonging to the idea of being earthed—fixed, resting—says, ‘It is curious that Sh. uses ease as connected with a term which most strongly expresses the idea of being fixed in a certain spot, or earth.’ WHITE: The Qq are confirmed by the passage from Ant. & Cire. If in the one case the flag root itself with motion, it seems clear that in the other it must root itself with ease. The opposition of ‘roots’ to ‘stir’ in the next line also supports this reading. STAUNTON: It is difficult to determine which expression deserves the preference.

33. Lethe] For instances of the conversion of one part of speech into another, especially in the case of rivers, see ABBOTT, § 22. [See ‘moment’s leisure,’ I, iii, 137.] For the omission of the article before the names of rivers, see KOCH, ii, § 159; MÄTZNER, iii, 158.

37. process] CLARENDON: This has here, perhaps, the sense of an official narrative, coming nearly to the meaning of the French process verbal. By a proclamation, dated 18 Aug. 1553, it was forbidden, without licence, ‘to prynce any booke, matter, baleit, ryme, interlude, processe, or treatysse.’—The English Drama and Sage (Roxburghe Library), p. 17.

That it went hand in hand even with the vow

I made to her in marriage; and to decline

Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor

Philosopher’s Fourth Satire of Mers, by Anton, 1616: ‘The poison’d henbane, whose cold juice doth kill.’ The word is written differently in Marlowe’s ‘Jew of Malta (Works, p. 164, ed. Dyce): ‘— the blood of Hydra, Lerna’s bane, The juice of heben, and Coctus’s breath.’ DOUCE: In the English edition by Batman on Bar tholomaeus de Proprietatibus Rebus, the article for the wood ebony is entitled, ‘Of Ebeno, cap. 52.’ It is not surprising that the dropping into the ears should occur, because Sh. was perfectly well acquainted with the supposed properties of the henbane, as recorded in Holland’s translation of Pliny, and elsewhere, and might apply this mode of use to any other poison. CALDECOTT: The medical professors of Shakespeare’s day believed that poison might be introduced into the system through the ears; the eminent surgeon, Ambrose Paré, Shakespeare’s contemporary, was suspected of having, when he dressed the ear of Francis II, infused poison into it.
Dr Sherwin informs us that in Gower’s ‘Confessio Amantis’ the couch of the god of sleep was made ‘Of Hebenus, that sleepie tree.’ SINGER: The French word hebenin, applied to anything made from ebony, comes indeed very close to the hebenon of Sh. ELZE: If the citation from Marlowe be correct, it might be better to read the line: ‘With juice of cursed henbon in a phial.’ Or perhaps should we not conjecture that hemlock was intended here? BEISLEY (Sh.’s Garden, p. 4): ‘Hebenon’ might have been originally written enorin, one of the names at that time of Solanum manicatum, called also deadly nightshade, a more powerful poison than henbane. TSCHICHEWITZ: The hebenon of the Qq can be only a mistaken substitution of the Spanish and Italian, ebano; French, ében; Latin, ebenus and hebenus.
Probably the -on of ‘hebenon’ was caused by the following ‘in,’ so that we may suppose that originally the word here was heben, the only correct etymological form, although it was sometimes incorrectly written hebon. MORSLEY: Not surely ebony (Diospyros), the fruit of which is often edible; but henbane, or Hyacinthes, which is a strong narcotic poison. It does not indeed produce any leprosus symptoms; but the belief of its doing so would, on the theory of signatures, be founded on the clammy appearance of the plant.

CLARENDON: Sh. would vecely have used this word with ‘crown’ and ‘queen’ if he had not first used it th ‘life.’ The phrase ‘dispatch of life’ does not occur again; we have, hower, ‘dispatch hisighted life,’ in Lear, IV, v, 12.

attached, as if it were its unaccented first syllable. The term Enclitic signifies “reclining on,” and so the interjection O in “O Lord” reclines on the support afforded by the accentual elevation of the word “Lord.” So that “O Lord” is pronounced like such a disyllable as alike, alike, away; in which words the metrical stroke could never fall on the first syllable. Oh! on the contrary, is one of the fullest of monosyllables, and it would be hard to place it in a verse except with the stress upon it. Thus, in Wordsworth: “But she is in her grave,—and oh, The dif-derived from our northern ancestors, who held that the sun and everything that contained light or fire had the property of expelling demons and spirits of all kinds.

With them it seems to have originated in the stories that are related in the Edda concerning the battles of Thor against the giants and evil demons, wherein he made use of his dreadful mallet of iron. . . . Many of the transparent precious stones were supposed to have the power of expelling evil spirits, and the flint and other

CORSON: The addressing his son by name at the conclusion of his speech is more effective from its familiarity than the third repetition of ‘adieu.’

92. Coleridge: I remember nothing equal to this burst unless it be the first speech of Prometheus, in the Greek drama, after the exit of Vulcan and the two Afitites. But Sh. alone could have produced the vow of Ham. to make his memory a blank of all maxims and generalized truths, that ‘observation had copied there,’—followed immediately by the speaker noting down the generalized fact, line 108.

93. Oh, fie!] STEVENS suspected that they were an interpolation, because they hurt the measure and were of an almost ludicrous turn. MITFORD, also (Gent. The expression is the first in which we have anything like the ing of the intellect, and what follows, to the end of the scene, can scarcely be called to an opinion of the perfect sanity of Hamlet, except on the supposition

now he began to put on the appearance of madness, which is not likely, the same time, it is to be observed that the light and sportive sallies which follow

Line 108 is an admiration comment upon line 106, and ‘So, uncle, there you are,’ is equivalent to the common exclamation, even at the present day, expressive of misdeeds, or intentions, unexpectedly brought to light.
It is by no means uncommon for a sentence expressive of wonder or incredulity to begin with That, as in line 108; we have, in Cym. 1, i, 63, ‘That a king’s children should be so convey’d’ The best possible stage-direction is given by Sh. himself when he makes Ham. exclaim ‘Now to my word,’ or, now to my memorandum, alluding to the purpose for which he had to get his tables forth. Wherefore punctuate thus: after ‘set it down,’ a full stop; after ‘and be a villain,’ a note of admiration; the stage-direction [Writing] to be removed two lines lower down. To this emendation of Bras’s, Ingleby added the stage-direction ‘Having kissed the tables,’ after ‘sworn’t,’ line 112. White thinks that waxen tables were used as late as the Elizabethan period; see Janua Linguarum, 1650: ‘—now-a-daires we write...with a writing pin in table-books, that it may be cancelled and blotted out by turning the pin the wrong end downward.’ Elze: Hamlet is hereby represented as a thinker and a scholar in opposition to the man of action.

the Qq, 'for the best reasons possible,' as he says, because 'Illo, ho,' 'is too light for Hor., who is a man of education and gravity; and there is something highly solemn and proper in making Ham. say the 'amen to a benediction pronounced on himself. Having done it, he assumes in an instant the levity that was proper to cover him, and answers to the call of Mar. in his own falconer's language.' CORSON, on the other hand, advocates the distribution of the Ff: 'Mar. seconds Horatio's prayer with his "So be it!" Hor. then, as Hamlet's bosom friend, uses the falconer's call, which would have been too familiar on the part of Mar., and Ham., in his excitement, responds in the same language.' TSCHISCHWITZ believes that this refers to Hamlet's decision to assume an antic disposition, which is immediately put in practice in his hawking answers. [If the exclamation be Hamlet's, which is doubtful, is it necessary to suppose that it is a response to Marcellus' benediction? May it not refer to the conclusion of Hamlet's writing in his tables? Ed.]

115. COLE RIDGE: This part of the scene after Hamlet's interview with the Ghost has been charged with an improbable eccentricity. But the truth is, after the mind has been stretched beyond its usual pitch and tone, it must either sink into exhaustion and inanity, or seek relief by change. It is thus well known that persons conversant with deeds of cruelty contrive to escape from conscience by connecting something of the ludicrous with them, and by inventing grotesque terms and a certain technical phraseology to disguise the horror of their practices. Indeed, paradoxical as it may appear, the terrible, by a law of the human mind, always touches on the verge of the ludicrous. Both arise from a perception of something out of the common order of things—something, in fact, out of its place; and if from this we can abstract danger, the uncommonness will alone remain, and the sense of the ridiculous be excited. The close alliance of these opposites,—they are not contraries,—appears from the circumstance, that laughter is equally the expression of extreme anguish and horror, as of joy; as there are tears of sorrow and tears of joy, so there is a laugh of terror and a laugh of merriment. These complex causes will naturally have produced in Ham. the disposition to escape from his own feelings of the overwhelming and supernatural by a wild transition to the ludicrous,—a sort of cunning bravado, bordering on the flights of delirium. For you may, perhaps, observe Hamlet's wildness is but half false; he plays that subtle trick of pretending to act only when he is very near really being what he acts.

123. Denmark] Seymou r (ii, 162): Hamlet begins these words in the ardour of sincerity and confidence; but, suddenly alarmed at the magnitude of the disclosure he is going to make, not only to Horatio, but to another besides, he breaks off hastily: 'There's ne'er a villain in all Denmark' that can match (perhaps he would have said) my uncle in villainy; and then recollecting the danger of such a declaration, he pauses for a moment and then abruptly concludes: 'but he's an arrant knave.' Moberly: Hamlet turns his words off into a strange and baffling jest, as a kind of refuge from the horror which would else overmaster him, with a feeling, at the same time, that this will be the best way to defeat enquiry.
125. needs...come] For instances of the omission of to before the infinitive,
see Abbott, § 349.
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part;
You, as your business and desire shall point you;
For every man hath business and desire,
Such as it is; and for my own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my lord
Ham. I'm sorry they offend you, heartily;

Yes, faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, Horatio,
And much offence too. Touching this vision here,
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you;
For your desire to know what is between us,
O’ermaster’t as you may. And now, good friends,
As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

_Hor._ What is’t, my lord? we will.
_Ham._ Never make known what you have seen to-night.
_Hor._ My lord, we will not.
_Ham._ Nay, but swear’t.
_Hor._ In faith,

My lord, not I.

_Mar._ Nor I, my lord, in faith.
_Ham._ Upon my sword.
_Mar._ We have sworn, my lord, already.

_137. offence_ DELIUS: Hamlet purposely misunderstands his friends’ words, in order to evade their enquiries. At first he pretends that his words have given offence, whereas his friends have merely found them vague; and when they reply that there is no offence, he takes ‘offence’ in a wider sense as a ‘crime,’ and refers it to the crime of his uncle that had just been divulged to him.

_137. too_ CAPELL (i. 128): The most emphaticall word in this sentence is ‘too.’ CORSON: There should be only a comma after this word. Hamlet refers to the wrong which, he has just learned, had been done his father: ‘Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, my Lord, And much offence too, touching this Vision here.’

_138. honest_ HUDSON: Hamlet means that it is a real Ghost, just what it appears to be, and not ‘the Devil’ in ‘a pleasing shape,’ as Horatio had apprehended it to be.

_141. soldiers_ WALKER (Vert. 175): Pronounced dissolvet.

_147. sword_ UPTON (p. 61, n.): He swears them on his sword, very soldier-like, and agreeable to the ancient custom of his country. Jordanes in his _Gothic History_ Hamlet: Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost: [Beneath] Swear.

mentions this custom. Ammianus Marcellinus relates the same ceremony among the Huns. Johnson: Garrick produced me a passage, I think, in Brantôme, from which it appeared that it was common to swear upon the cross which the old swords always had upon the hilt. Douce (ii, 229): In consequence of this practice, the name of Jesus was sometimes inscribed on the handle or some other part. Nares: The singular mixture of religious and military fanaticism which arose from the Crusades gave rise to the extraordinary custom of taking a solemn oath upon a sword. In a plain, unenriched sword, the separation between the blade and the hilt was usually a straight transverse bar, which, suggesting the idea of a cross, added to the devotion which every true knight felt for his favorite weapon, and evidently led to this practice; of which the instances are too numerous to be collected. The sword or the blade were often mentioned in this ceremony without reference to the cross. It is ludicrously referred to in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 371. Dyce (Gloss.): The custom of swearing by a sword prevailed even among the barbarous worshippers of Odin: 'The Scythians commonly substituted a sword as the most proper symbol to represent the supreme god. It was by planting a spear in the middle of a field that they usually marked out the place set apart for prayers and sacrifices; and when they had relaxed from their primitive strictness, so far as to build temples and set up idols in them, they yet preserved some traces of the ancient custom by putting a sword in the hands of Odin's statues. The respect they had for their arms made them also swear by instruments so valuable and so useful, as being the most sacred things they knew. Accordingly, in an ancient Icelandic poem, a Scandinavian, to assure himself of a person's good faith, requires him to swear, "by the shoulder of a horse, and the edge of a sword." This oath was usual more especially on the eve of some great engagement; the soldiers engaged themselves by an oath of this kind not to see, though their enemies should be never so superior in number.'—Mallet's Northern Antiquities, &c., transl. by Percy, vol. i, p. 216, ed. 1779. [For many instances of oaths taken upon swords, see Farmer, Steevens and Caldecott. Ed.] Knight: We have little doubt that Sh. was aware of the peculiar custom of the Gothic nations, and did not make Hamlet propose the oath merely as a practice of chivalry.

147. already] Hudson: The oath they have already sworn is 'in faith.' But this has not enough of ritual solemnity in it to satisfy Hamlet.

148. Indeed] Staunton: The meaning of Hamlet unquestionably is, Not in words only, but in act, in form; upon the cross of my sword, pledge yourselves.

149. Coleridge: These subterraneous speeches of the Ghost are hardly defensible; but I would call your attention to the characteristic difference between the Ghost, as a superstition connected with the most mysterious truths of revealed religion,—and Shakespeare's consequent reverence in his treatment of it,—and the foul earthly witcheries and wild language in Macbeth.
Ham. Ah, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, true-penny?—
Come on; you hear this fellow in the cellarge;
Consent to swear.
Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.
Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen.
Swear by my sword.

150. true-penny] Steevens: This word, as well as some of Hamlet's former exclamations, we find in The Malcontent, 1604. Collier: This word is also found in Nash's Almond for a Parrot. It is (as I learn from some Sheffield authorities) a mining term, and signifies a particular indication in the soil of the direction in which ore is to be found. Hence Hamlet may with propriety address the Ghost under ground by that name. Forby (Vocab. of East Anglia): Hearty old fellow; staunch and trusty; true to his purpose or pledge. Halliwell suspects that it was sometimes applied to a sexton, therefore very appropriate here. Upton (p. 9, note): 'The Vice,' in our old Moralties, was used to make fun with the Devil, and he had several trite expressions, as, 'I'll be with you in a trice,' 'Ah, ha, boy, are you there? &c. And it was great entertainment to the audience, to see their old enemy belaboured in effigy. Now, Ham. is resolved to break the subject of the discourse to none but Hor.; to others he intends to appear as a sort of madman, he therefore now addresses the Ghost as The Vice does the Devil, at the same time he wishes the sentinels to imagine that this was a shape the Devil had put on; and in II, ii, 575, he is somewhat of this opinion himself. This manner of speech was what the audience were well acquainted with; and it takes off in some measure from the horror of the scene.

153. seen] Walker (Crit. iii, 263): The inversion [by putting only a comma after 'seen'] is anti-Shakespearian. Corson: Horatio asks Hamlet to propose the oath, which he does, namely: 'Never to speak of this that you have seen,' and then having done so, he tells them to swear by his sword, which is additional.

156. Hic et ubique] Tschischwitz: The repetition of the oath, the shifting of the ground, and the Latin phrase are taken from the ceremonies of conjurors. Silberschlag (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1113): It is highly probable the conclu-

=ion of this scene is a remnant, word for word, of the earlier tragedy by Shakepeare’s predecessor; and this little snatch of Latinity upholds this view. The Dramatic predecessors of Shakespeare were very fond of interlarding their pieces with such little snatches of Latin, and Shakespeare yielded to the practice only in his very earliest plays, not in his later ones. Therefore, from the use of these little phrases alone we might infer that Shakespeare retained all of these concluding lines from the earlier drama, perhaps from no other reason than that the scene had become a popular favorite.

158. upon my sword,] Walker (Crit. iii, 263) was the first to advocate this punctuation of Ff; and Corson says: ‘The true meaning is indicated by the comma after “sword.” The “swear by my sword” is but a repetition of the same idea.’ Walker adds: ‘The Ghost’s “Swear by his sword”—if this reading be correct—is, as it were, an echo of Hamlet’s words.’ In the textual notes the punctuation of those editors alone is given who have followed the arrangement of the Ff.

163. pioneer] Barnes: A pioneer; an attendant on an army, whose office is to dig level, remove obstructions, form trenches, and do all works executed with un-warlike tools, as spades, &c. Dyce (Gloss.): They are generally soldiers who, on account of misconduct, had been degraded to the office. [For the spelling, see Walker, Vers. 217; Crit. iii, 263; Abbott, §492. Also I, ii, 172; III, iv, 206. Ed.]

165. welcome] Warburton: Receive it to yourself; take it under your own roof;
as much as to say: Keep it secret. Alluding to the laws of hospitality. Masun: Hamlet means merely to request that they would seem not to know it,—to be unacquainted with it. Caldecott: Receive it courteously and compliantly. Clare-ron: Receive it without doubt or question.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy. But come; here, as before, never, so help you mercy, how strange or odd soe'er I bear myself, as I perchance hereafter shall think meet to put an antic disposition on, that you, at such times seeing me, never shall, with arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake, or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase, as 'Well, well, we know,' or 'We could, an if we would,'

8. keep] Dyce (Gloss.) : To live, to dwell.
11. more nearer] For instances of double comparatives, see Abbott, § 11.
Clarendon: 'Neere' of F. shows that the double comparative was growing obsolete in 1632.
Keightly believes all difficulty to be removed by following Jennens' reading.
Moorely: By these natural and circuitous inquiries you will get nearest the point than you possibly could by a direct question.
[Pol. repeats this same idea in lines 65, 66. For other instances of double comparatives, see III, ii, 291;
III, iv, 157; V, ii, 121. Ed.]
12. it] See Abbott, § 226, for instances of 'it' used indefinitely, as the object of a verb, without referring to anything previously mentioned, and seeming to indicate a pre-existing object in the mind of the person spoken of, 'or in the mind of the speaker, as in this instance,' Clarendon adds.
22. slips] Clarendon: Compare Oth. IV, i, 9. Perhaps Sh. had the other sense of the word in his mind, as in 2 Hen. IV: III, ii, 214: 'graft with crab-tree slip.'

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling, Drabbing; you may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,
That he is open to incontinency;
That's not my meaning; but breathe his faults so quaintly
That they may seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind,
A savageness in unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault.

25. fencing] This is bracketed by Warburton as 'an interpolation.' Johnson: A too diligent frequented of the fencing-school, a resort of violent and lawless young men. Malone: I suppose it means piquing himself on his skill in the use of the sword, and consequently quarrelling and brawling. 'The cunning of Fencers [is now] applied to quarrelling.'—Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, p. 46, ed. Arber.

29. another] Theobald (Sh. Restored, p. 61), on the ground that there could be no second scandal without a first (and Polonius implies that 'Drabbing' is no scandal), conjectured an utter for 'another.' And this emendation was adopted by Han. Warb. Johns. and Elze. But Theobald, in his edition, withdrew it, because Sh. uses 'other' in the same way elsewhere; as in Rick. II: I, i, 33, and Macb. IV, iii, 90. Malone: That is, a very different and more scandalous failing: habitual incontinency. Moberly: A deeper kind of scandal; much as ἄλοκληρος means particularly, and ἄλογος ἀοιρος, in the Odyssey, 'an out-of-the-way or foreign traveller.'

31. breathe] Dyce (Gloss.): To utter, to speak; see also line 44.

now forgotten. We find it in Golding’s Ovid, the seventh book, the book in which Sh. was so well read: ‘—like a wily fox he runs not forth directly out, Nor makes a windlasse over all the champion fields about,’ &c. It is also used by Bishop Hacket.
Edinburgh Review (Shakespearian Glossaries, July, 1869): In Shakespeare’s day, windlass, literally, a winding, was used to express taking a circuitous course, fetching a compass, making an indirect advance, or, more colloquially, beating about the bush instead of going directly to a place or object; and in this sense it exactly harmonizes with the other phrase used by Polonius to express the same thing,— assays of bias,’—attempts in which, instead of going straight to the object, we seek to reach it by a curved or winding course, the bias gradually bringing the ball round to the Jack. Thus, in Golding’s Ovid: ‘The winged God...Continued not directly forth, but gan me down to stouple, And fetched a windlass round about.’ CLAREN-DON: Also Lily’s Euphues and his England (ed. Arber), p. 270: ‘I now fetching a windlesse, that I might better have a shoote, was prevented with ready game.’

65. assays of bias] CLARENDON: A metaphor from the game of bowls, in which the player does not aim at the Jack (or ‘mistress,’ as it was called in Shakepeare’s time) directly, but in a curve, so that the bias brings the ball round. ‘Assays of bias’ are therefore indirect attempts.

66. directions] CLARENDON: Indirect methods. We find out indirectly, says
Polonius, what we wish to know directly. See Jul. Cæs. IV, i, 75.

69. God be wi’ you] See Macb. III, i, 43, or WALKER (Vers. 228).
69. fare you well] TSCHISCHWITZ: Although the double leave-taking is quite Rety. Good my lord!

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.

Rety. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Rety. Well, my lord.

Pol. Farewell! [Exit Reynaldo.

Enter Ophelia.

How now, Ophelia! what's the matter?

Oph. Oh, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

71. in keeping with the loquacity of Polonius, we are justified, nevertheless, in expecting a reply from the departing servant. I have therefore given the words 'God be wi' you' (which, by the contraction of with into 'wi', express a certain condescension) to Polonius, and 'fare you well' to Reynaldo.

70. Good my lord] Dyce: Reynaldo has previously said 'Very good, my lord,' and he afterwards says, 'Well, my lord,' but the present speech is not therefore to be pointed 'Good, my lord.' Compare II, ii, 521.

71. in yourself] Johnson: Perhaps this means, in your own person, not by spies. Capell (i, 129): 'In yourself' is put for—observe of yourself, or with your own eyes; for he had been lesson'd before to pick up his 'inclination' from others. C. (in Var. 1821): The temptations you feel, suspect in him. Caldecott: It seems no more than 'of or by yourself,' and as if the word 'in' had been altogether omitted. He was at first to discover Laertes's inclination by enquiry from others; but now to find them out by personal observation. Tschischwitz: I find it hard to persuade myself that 'in' is anything more than a misprint, which arose from the last syllable of the preceding word. A change of 'in' into them could be easily made except for the uniformity of the old copies. Clarendon: Possibly it means, Conform your own conduct to his inclinations.

73. music] Clarke: Let him go on, to what tune he pleseth; let him conduct himself in any style and at any rate he chooses. Hudson: Eye him sharpely, but do it sily, and let him fiddle his secrets all out. Visher (Sh. Jahrbuch, ii. p. 149): Here we have the key to the whole scene. His son may gamble, drink, swear, quarrel, drab, enter houses of sale, videlicet, brothels, only—let him ply his music: true cavalier-breeding!

74. matter] Moreley: There is a wonderfully fine contrast between the prolix tyness of Polonius's attempt to find out what had better be unknown, and the scene of distracting and passionate misery which shows how Hamlet's soul has been shatered by an unsought-for revelation.

75. affrighted] Eckhardt (Vorlesungen über Hamlet. Aarau, 1853, p. 96):
Pol. With what, i' the name of God?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbraced;
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ancle;

76. With what, i' the name of God? 78. Lord] Prince Q76.
Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbraced;
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,

76. i' the... God I] Om. Q76.

80. down-gyved] downe gyved Q3, downe gyred QQ, downe gyred F5, downe gyved F5, down-gyred Theoib.

The supposition that Hamlet went to Ophelia directly after the interview with the Ghost is incorrect, and for the following reasons: first, the interview between Po-onius and Reynaldo implies that some little time has elapsed since the departure of Laertes for Paris; secondly, during this time Ophelia has returned Hamlet's letters, and denied him access; her father asks her, 'Have you given him any hard words of late?' The letter which Polonius reads to the King must, therefore, have belonged to a period before the opening of the drama. Ophelia had strictly obeyed her father's commands, and returned all Hamlet's letters. Thirdly, Polonius goes at once to the King, and yet, when he speaks to him of Hamlet, the King already knew of Ham-let's (feigned) insanity, and therefore must himself have seen the Prince before Ophelia saw him. Fourthly, between the close of the first act and the present scene, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern must have been summoned on account of Hamlet's changed demeanor, and of the King's suspicions which that demeanor had aroused.

77. closet] CLARENDON: A private apartment. Hence the King's private secretary was called 'clerk of the closet.' See III, ii, 315; and King John, IV, ii, 267.

II, i, 262.

79. fou'd] CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: Theobald reads loose on the authority, as he says, 'of the elder Qq.' It is not the reading of any of the first six, but of those of 1676, 1683, 1695, and 1703. Had Capell been aware of this, he would scarcely have designated Theobald's mistake as a 'downright falsehood.' Theobald at the time of writing his Shk. Restored knew of no Quarto earlier than that of 1637 (Shk.
Rest. p. 70), and it is just possible that some copy of this edition (Q5) from which that of 1676 was printed may have had the reading 'loose.' [The Cam. Edd. refer to a note on III, iv, 59, where they give two different readings in two different copies of Q5: 'a heaven-kissing' in Ingleby's copy, and 'a heauen, a kissing,' in Capell's copy. This variation in copies of the same date has long been known to exist in the other Qq, but, I confess, I was not prepared to find much variation in later Qq of the same date. In no less than twenty-four instances, however, I have found that only Qq of Q70 differs from that of the Cam. Edd., as recorded in their notes. Ed.]
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport
As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors, he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know,

But truly I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm,
And with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;

90. As You Like It, III, ii, 398.

91. down-gyved] Theobald interprets his reading, down-gyved, as 'rolled down to the ankle,' and derives gyved from γυδω, to bend, to round. Heath gives the true definition of 'down-gyved': fallen down to the ankle, after the fashion of gyves, or fetters.

92. purport] Walker (iii, 264): Pronounce 'purport,' not 'piteous.'

93, 80 . . . As] See Abbott, § 275; and II, ii, 177; or Macb. I, ii, 43.

94. Kightley completed the rhythm of this line by the insertion of in after 'comes.' Abbott, § 478, makes the second syllable of 'horrors' a foot by itself on the principle that 'er' or 'or' final seems to have been sometimes pronounced with a kind of 'burr,' which produced the effect of an additional syllable. A process which neither my tongue nor my imagination can compass. Why not let Ophelia's strong emotion shudderingly fill up the gap?

97. stay'd] Abbott, § 507: As ed is pronounced after i and u, so it might be after y in 'stayed,' but the effect would be painful. The pause after 'it' must supply the extra syllable.

98. shaking] Tschischwitz: A verbal substantive; is made is understood.
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
He raised a sigh so piteous and profound
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk
And end his being; that done, he lets me go;
And with his head over his shoulder turn’d
He seem’d to find his way without his eyes;
For out o’ doors he went without their help,
And to the last bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me; I will go seek the king.
This is the very ecstasy of love;
Whose violent property fordoes itself
And leads the will to desperate undertakings,
As oft as any passion under heaven
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,—

95. bulk] Boswell: This is not, I think, all the body, but the breast. Pettorata, in Florio, is explained, ‘a shock against the breast or bulk.’ [Dyce (Gloss.) also cites this definition of Pettorata from Florio, but neither the word nor definition is in my copy of Florio, 1598. Malone cites R. of Lucrece, 467, ‘her heart beating over bulk,’ and Rich. III. I, iv, 40, ‘my panting bulk,’ but defines ‘bulk’ by ‘all he body.’ Ed.] Singer: ‘The Bulke or breast of a man.’—Baret’s Antiochius.

Dyce (Gloss.): ‘The Bulke of the bodie. Troms, buste.’—Congrave. Clarendon also cites Congrave: ‘Buste, the whole bulke or bodie of a man, from his face to his middle.’—Minshew gives: ‘Pechugüera, the whole bulke of the breast.’ Ed.]

100. Miles (Review of Hamlet, p. 28): We are not permitted to see Hamlet in his ecstasy of love, but what a picture! How he must have loved her, that love should bring him to such a pass!—his knees knocking each other—knees that had firmly followed a beckoning ghost! There is more than the love of forty thousand mothers in that hard grasp of the wrist,—in that long gaze at arm’s length,—in the force that might, but will not, draw her nearer! And never a word from this king of words! His first great silence,—the second is death!

102. ecstasy] Alienation of mind, madness. See III, i, 160; III, iv, 74; 138 139; Mach. III, ii, 22; IV, iii, 170.

103. fordoes] Steevens: To destroy. Nares: For has here its negative power. Clarendon: Like the German ver, it is also sometimes intensive, as in ‘forgive,’ ‘forewearied,’ ‘forspent.’ [It is so used in the past participle of this very verb in Mid. N. D. V, i, 381, ‘with weary task fordone.’—Ed.]
What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord, but, as you did command,
I did repel his letters, and denied
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorry that with: better heed and judgement
I had not quoted him. I fear'd he did but trifle
And meant to wreck thee; but beshrew my jealousy!

By heaven, it is as proper to our age
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion. ' Come, go we to the king;

111. heed] Theobald preferred speed of the Ff, in the sense either of success, fortune (frequent in Sh.), or of celerity.

112. quoted] M. Mason: Invariably used by Sh. in the sense of to observe. Malone: 'Quoter, To quote, or marke in the margent, to note by the way.'—Cotgrave. Dyce (Gloss.): To note, to mark,—formerly pronounced, and often written. cot. See Rom. & Jul. I, iv, 31.

113. wreck] Collier (ed. 2): This is one of the places where the old spelling of 'wreck,' wrack (observed by some modern editors, as if we ought to return to the loose and uncertain orthography of our ancestors), produces confusion. It is not quite clear whether Pol. means wrack, in the sense of cast away, or rack, in the sense of tortured; we have taken it in the former, as the most probable. Upton (p. 209): Read: 'rack thee,' i.e. vex and grieve thee.

115. cast] Johnson: This is not the remark of a weak man. The vice of age is too much suspicion. Men long accustomed to the wiles of life cast commonly beyond themselves, let their cunning go farther than reason can attend to it. This is always the fault of a little mind, made artful by long commerce with the world. Moberly: To forecast more than we ought for our own interests. Clarendon: To 'contrive,' 'design,' 'plan.' Compare Spenser's Fairy Queen, i, 5, 12: 'Of all attonce he cast avengd to be.' Cotgrave translates Fr. minuter, 'to devise, cast, or lay the first project of a designe.'

118, 119. WARBURTON: That is, this must be made known to the King, for (being kept secret) the hiding of Hamlet's love might occasion more mischief to us from him and the Queen, than the uttering or revealing of it will occasion hate and resentment from Hamlet. The poet's obscure expression seems to have been caused by his affection of concluding the scene with a couplet. Heath: The concealment of it may be attended with consequences productive of greater calamity than the displeasure can possibly be with which the disclosing it may be received. CALDE-

COTT: At the close of an act, or when the scene is shifted, and there is a pause in the action of the drama, it was the usage of our dramatists, down to the middle of the last century, not simply to divert attention from the main object, as here, by the introduction of a couplet or rhymes, but to make the subject of such couplet foreign altogether to the interests of the drama, an unconnected flourish, and that, not unfrequently, a labored and florid simile. Such a custom in Sh., so far from being what WARBURTON calls it, was the very opposite of 'affection;' not to have done it occasionally would have been an affectation of singularity. CLARENDON: In the couplets which conclude scenes the sense is frequently sacrificed to the rhyme. The sense here seems to be—Hamlet's mad conduct might cause more grief if it were hidden than the revelation of his love for Ophelia would cause hatred, i. e. on the part of the King and Queen. Yet the Queen afterwards expresses her approval of the match, III, i, 38. Compare also, V, i, 231–234. TSCHESCHWITZ cannot per-sue himself that the author of the Sonnets and of Venus & Adonis could have composed lines so faulty in logic and style as these, and he therefore thinks that even stickers for the authorized text will pardon him for changing line 119 into 'More grief to him, than hate to us their love.' He also marks 'Ophelia exit' after line 117.

1. ROSENCRANTS] THORNESBY (N. & QU. 5 Aug. 1871): A Danish nobleman
Moreover that we much did long to see you,
The need we have to use you did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,

of this name attended the Danish ambassador into England on the ascension of James I. [Steevens says it was an ambassador. Ed.]

2. Moreover that] Moerbery: Over and above that we longed to see you. On the other hand, 'more above,' in line 125, means 'moreover.' Clarendon: Besides that. Hudson: I do not recollect another instance of these words thus used.

5. transformation] On the pronunciation of the final ioni as a dissyllable, see Walker, Vern. 230; Abbott, § 479, and V, ii, 217.

6. Sith] Moerbery: The oldest meaning of this difficult word may be seen from the Fairy Queen (iii, 10, 33), 'he humbly thanked him a thousand sith,' literally,
'a thousand steps' (Mätzner, i, p. 390 [410]). Hence, apparently, 'sithen the fathers died,' in Wickliffe's Bible, means 'from the time when;' the preposition being omitted, as in many English phrases even now. Then come the absolutes 'sith, sithence, since,' as in line 12 below. Lastly, the adverb becomes a causative conjunction; on the principle that 'proper hoc' may be practically, though loosely, expressed by 'post hoc.' That is, 'Sin thou are righteous judge' means 'following on the fact that thou art a righteous judge.' Clarendon: Marsh (Lectures on the English Language, pp. 584–586), that in the latter half of the sixteenth century
'good authors established a distinction between the forms, and used sith only as a logical word, an illative, while sithence and since, whether as prepositions or as adverbs, remained mere narrative words confined to the signification of time after.'
Sh., it is clear, did not observe this distinction, whether we take the quarto or the folios to represent his exact text. [See IV, iv, 45.]

30. bent] JOHNSON (Much Ado, IV, i, 183): 'Bent' is used by Sh. for the utmost degree of any passion or mental quality. The expression is derived from archery; the bow has its bent when it is drawn as far as it can be. [See Ham. III, ii, 307.]

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

 Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew’s levies, which to him appear’d
To be a preparation ‘gainst the Polack,
But better look’d into, he truly found
It was against your highness; whereat, griev’d
That so his sickness, age, and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand, sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys,
Receives rebuke from Norway, and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle never more
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee

commercial value of money in those earlier ages, and thinks it probable that in the poor kingdom of Norway, in Hamlet's time, the king's whole revenue might scarce amount to so large a sum. Hunter (ii, 228): The reading of $Q_b$ is one proof, amongst others, either that the editors of $F_s$ did not disdain the assistance of $Q_b$, imperfect as it is, or that $Q_b$ has preserved readings which the editors of $F_s$ had other reasons for knowing to be genuine.

80. It likes] Abbott (§ 297): An abundance of impersonal verbs is a mark of an early stage in a language, denoting that a speaker has not yet arrived so far in development as to trace his own actions and feelings to his own agency. There are many more impersonal verbs in Early English than in Elizabethan, and many more in Elizabethan than in modern English. See 'Well be (it) with you,' II, ii, 362, III. iv, 173; V, ii, 63. Mätzner (iii, 174) gives the same phrase: 'It likes us well,' from King John, II, i, 533, with the following explanation: 'The dative in Germanic verbs passes completely into the accusative where the consciousness of the language abandons the substitute for the dative by the periphrasis with to.' ['Zounds! I was never so bethumped with words since first I called my brother's father, dad.']—Ed.

86. expostulate] CALDECOTT: To show by discussion, to put the pros and cons, to answer demands upon the question. 'Pausanias had now opportunity to visit her and to expostulate the favorable deceit, whereby she had caused his jealosie.'—Stanley's Aurora, 1659, p. 44. HUNTER (ii, 228): 'Expostulate' is of rare occurrence. It occurs in A Brief Relation of the Shipwreck of Henry May, 1593, incorporated in Captain Smith's book on Virginia: 'How these isles came by the name of the Bermudas, ... I will not expostulate, nor trouble your patience with these uncertain antiquities,' p. 172. It means, to inquire, and when it is an inquiry from a superior in a state of displeasure, we get at once to what is the present signification of the world. Thus, in the manuscript book of Anecdotes collected by Sir
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,

Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it; for, to define true madness,
What is't but to be nothing else but mad?
But let that go.

Poul. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true; 'tis true 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis 'tis true; a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him then; and now remains
That we find out the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective comes by cause.
Thus it remains and the remainder thus.

109. ALFRED ROFFE (N. & Qu. 5 Oct. 1861) gives a list of no less than nine metrical and musical adaptations of this letter of Hamlet’s. One of them, in date about 1800, ‘Composed for and dedicated to Miss Abrams by Michael Kelly,’ is as follows: ‘Doubt (O most beautified), that the stars are fire, Doubt (my soul’s idol), that the sun doth move, Doubt that eternal Truth may prove a liar, But, sweet Ophelia, never doubt I love. My mind no skill in these fond numbers owns, Yet these declare I love thee best, most best, And though no Muses reckon up my groans, These lines may shelter in thy snowy breast.’

109. beautified] THEOBALD objected to this word, because of its two meanings, viz. artificial and natural beauty; the first would be manifestly inappropriate here, and the second Sh. has used in Two Gent. IV, i, 55, and would not, therefore, here call it a ‘vile phrase.’ He therefore substituted beautified, which is less of an anti-climax than ‘beautified,’ after ‘Celestial and soul’s idol,’ and which, moreover, would be the more likely to excite the Roman Catholic Polonius to anger, since it is almost peculiarly applied to the Virgin Mary. CAVELL (i, 130) prefers beautified, because of its concordance with ‘celestial’ and ‘idol,’ and because the passage demands it, which is certainly verse. Accordingly, he reads lines 109 to 112, inclusive, as verse, dividing at ‘idol’ (which, metri gratid, he reads ‘fair idol’), ‘Ophelia,’ ‘beautified’ (which he reads that beautify’d), ‘these.’ JOHNSON: ‘Beautified’ seems to be a vile phrase for the ambiguity of its meaning. STEEVES: Nash dedicates his Christ’s Tears over Jerusalem, 1594, ‘To the most beautified lady, the lady Elizabeth Carey.’ NARES: A common word in those times, particularly in the addresses of letters. The examples wherein a person is said to be ‘beautified’ with various endowments seem hardly apposite. CALDECOTT: That is, accomplished.

—metricall speach...by Art beautified and adorned, and brought far from the primitiue rudenesse.'—PUTTMANN’S Arte of English Poetic, 1589 [p. 39, ed. Arber].

DYCE (Gloss.) By ‘beautified’ (which, however, ‘vile a phrase,’ is common enough in our early writers) I believe Hamlet meant beautiful, and not accomplished.
That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase; but you shall hear. Thus:

[Reads.] 'In her excellent white bosom, these,' &c.

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.

[Reads.] 'Doubt thou the stars are fire;
Doubt that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a liar;
But never doubt I love.'

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers. I have not

A art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best, O most 120

Best, believe it. Adieu.

machine is to him, HAMLET.'
This in obedience hath my daughter shown me; 125
And more above, hath his solicitings,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she received his love?
Pol. What do you think of me?
King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think, 130
When I had seen this hot love on the wing,—
As I perceived it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me,—what might you,
Or my dear majesty, your queen here, think,
If I had play’d the desk or table-book, moist deere Lady, whilst this machine is to him,’ filled up the breadth of the page, and ‘Hamlet’ was forced into the line below: (Hamlet. In Q, the last line of the letter is merely ‘machine is to him,’ and although there was abundance of room for the insertion of ‘Hamlet,’ yet the printer followed copy and retained it in the line below. Q, was printed from Q, and kept up the blunder. Ed.]

Moreover, besides.

Moreover, besides.

Caldecott perceives a difficulty in the grammar or construction in the reading both of F and Q. It is strange that he failed to see that ‘hath’ in this line is in the same construction as ‘hath’ in the preceding line.

perceived] Morely: There is much humor in the old man’s inveterate foible for omniscience. He absurdly imagines that he had discerned for himself all the steps of Hamlet’s love and madness; while of the former he had been unaware till warned by some friends; and the latter did not exist at all.

play’d] Keightley: Perhaps ply’d, as pretending to be occupied.

Warburton: If either I had conveyed intelligence between them and been the confident of their amours; or had connived at it, only observed them in secret, without acquainting my daughter with my discovery; or, lastly, been negligent in observing the intrigue, and overlooked it; what would you have thought of me?

Malone: The first line may mean, if I had locked up this secret in my own breast, as closely as it were confined in a desk or table-book. Morely paraphrases this same line: If I had just minutted the matter down in my own mind.

Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think? No, I went round to work,
And my young mistress thus I did bespeak:
‘Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star;
This must not be;’ and then I prescripts gave her,
That she should lock herself from his resort,
Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
And he repulsed, a short tale to make,
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,

Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness, and by this declension
Into the madness wherein now he raves
And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think 'tis this?

Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time, I 'ld fain know that,
That I have positively said 'tis so,'

He would not only be thought to have discovered this intrigue by his own sagacity, but to have remarked all the stages of Hamlet's disorder, from his sadness to his raving, as regularly as his physician could have done; when all the while the madness was only feigned. The humor of this is exquisite from a man who tells us, with a confidence peculiar to small politicians, that he could find: 'Where truth was hid, though it were hid indeed Within the centre.'

147. watch} CALDECOTT: A sleepless state.

147, 148. thence into . . . lightness] *ALTHOUGH WALKER (Vers. 20) SUGGESTS that here 'weakness' and 'lightness' be pronounced as trisyllables, yet he adds: I rather suspect that we should write, 'thence to a weakness, thence Into a lightness.' ABBOTT, § 483, while conceding the possibility that 'weakness' is a trisyllable, yet thinks that 'the repeated "thence" may require a pause after it, which might excuse the absence of an unaccented syllable.'

149. madness] CLARKE: Sh. intended Hamlet should be deeply moved by Ophelia's unexplained repulse of him, coming immediately upon the shock he receives from the Ghost's revelation, and he seizes upon the one as affording apparent cause for his disturbance of mind arising out of the other, and as giving plausible and ostensible ground for the madness which he assumes, and by which he wishes to be believed to have been seized. Polonius's deduction and his report to the King and Queen of that, and Hamlet's condition, are precisely what the prince desired should successively accrue from his own behaviour. This all appears to us to be in favor of our opinion with regard to Hamlet's feigned insanity.

150. all we] ABBOTT, § 240: A feeling of the unemphatic nature of the nominatives we and they prevents us from saying 'all we.' [For another instance of a transposed pronoun, see V, ii, 14. Ed.]

150. for] DELIUS: The relative which must be supplied from the foregoing 'wherein.'

151. this] CORSON: The reading of F, 'tis this,' suits better what precedes, and the reply of the Queen that follows.

King: Not that I know.

Pol. [Pointing to his head and shoulder] Take this from this, if this be otherwise.

158. centre] Tschi masks: Despite the reading of Qs, I nevertheless believe that by 'centre' is meant the middle of the palm of the hand, a point important in alimetry. Clarendon: Sh., like Bacon, held to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy. See Tro. & Cres. I, iii, 85. Compare Th. & And. IV, iii, 12.

159. four] Malone: I formerly was inclined to adopt Tyrwhitt's proposed meditation of for [anticipated by Hanmer], but have now no doubt that the text is right. The expressions, 'four hours together,' 'two hours together,' &c., appear to have been common. So in Lear, I, ii, 170; Wint. T. V, ii, 148. Again in Webster's Duchess of Malfi [ed. Dyce i, 260]: 'She will muse four hours together.'
Shiblair (ed. 3): It is not likely that Polonius would specify precisely how long Hamlet walked in the lobby, and the (MS) reads for. White: The obvious reading for has occurred to many critical readers; and to modern taste this would seem an improvement. But similar phrases are of common occurrence in old books.

Tawny: 'Four' here, as in Cor. I, vi, 84, and elsewhere, appears a mere collonialism, to signify some, or a limited number, as forty is frequently used to express a great number. Clarendon: So in Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie (p. 307, d. Arber): 'laughing and gibing with their familiars four hours by the clocke.'

228 (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, Bd. xi.) has collected many instances from Elizabethan writers of the use of four and forty, and forty thousand to express an indefinite umber, and probably, with his unwearyed industry, he could find forty more. He also shows that this usage is not confined to England, but is common in German.

Hamlet says he loved Ophelia more than 'forty thousand brothers,' V, i, 257.

173. fishmonger] Whitier (p. 152, foot-note) cites a passage from Jonson's Masque at Christmas (vol. viii, p. 277, ed. Gifford), where Venus, who is represented as a deaf tire-woman, says that she was 'a fishmonger's daughter.' 'Probably, it was supposed,' adds Whitier, 'that the daughters of these tradesmen, who dealt in so nourishing a species of food, were blessed with extraordinary powers of conception.' Hence he infers some such allusion by Hamlet. Gifford, in his note on this passage in Jonson, says: 'This alludes to the prolific nature of fish. The jest, which, such as it is, is not unfrequent in our old dramatists, needs no further illustration.'

Malone: Perhaps a joke was here intended. 'Fishmonger' was a cant term for a wench. In Barnabe Rich's Irish Hub hub: 'Senex fornicator, an old fishmonger.'

Coleridge: That is, you are sent to fish out this secret. This is Hamlet's own meaning. G. M. Zornlin (Sh. Soc. Papers, vol. iii, p. 157) supposes this word to have been used in a figurative sense, perhaps somewhat as we should now apply the word ferret, or as a dealer in baits, and that it contains an intimation that Hamlet was aware of Polonius's being engaged in some underhand policy, and that he knew Ophelia was to play her part in it is evident from the caution which follows respecting her, which the old man loses sight of in his joy at hearing his daughter alluded to.'

Moberly: Probably the meaning may be: 'You deal in wares that will not bear the sun;' that is, that Polonius has a daughter, and that all women are as faithless and unchaste as his mother, so that the least trial overthrows them.

Tieck (Kritische Schriften, iii, 262): When this word is spoken the sense may be made so obvious that one can hardly miss it: 'I would you were so honest a man—but—you are a fishmonger.' You are a pander, not so honest a man as a fishmonger. Hamlet casts in the teeth of Polonius that he made opportunities for him and his daughter, and the following speech: 'For if the sun,' &c. is only a continuation of the expression of Hamlet's contempt for both father and daughter. Friesen (Briefe über Hamlet, 1864, p. 287) supposes that this rather refers to Polonius's share in providing opportunities for Claudius and the Queen, during the old king's Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Döring (Shakespeare’s Hamlet, &c. 1865, p. 31) refers it to Polonius’s aid in promoting the marriage of Claudius and the Queen. See, also, Gerte’s extraordinary proverb in his note on this passage in Appendix, Vol. II.

180. sun] Tschirschwitz (Sh. Forsch. i, 63) finds a parallel to this thought in Giordano Bruno (vol. ii, 246), where the philosophy is taught that, ‘sol et homo generant hominem.’ Ingleby (Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 159) gives, as a curious illustration of Hamlet’s simile, a passage from St Augustine, De fide et symbolo, § 10: Debet igitur intueri qui hoc putant, solidi huius radios, quem certe non tanquam creaturam Dei laudant sed tanquam Deum adorant, per cloacam foetores et quae-cumque horribilia usquequaque diffundi et in his operari secundum naturam suam, nec tamen inde aliqua contaminatione sordescere, cum visibilis lux visibilibus sordibus sit natura coniunctior.

181. good kissing carrion] Warburton: This strange passage, when set right, will be seen to contain as great and sublime a reflection as any the poet puts into his hero’s mouth throughout the whole play. We will first give the true reading, which is this: For if the Sun breed maggots in a dead dog, Being a God, kissing carrion.—As to the sense, we may observe that the illative particle [for] shows the speaker to be reasoning from something he had said before; what that was we learn in these words, to be honest, as this world goes, is to be one picked out of ten thousand. Having said this, the chain of ideas led him to reflect upon the argument which libertinism brings against Providence from the circumstance of abundant evil. In the next speech, therefore, he endeavors to answer that objection, and vindicate Providence, even on a supposition of the fact, that almost all men were wicked. His argument in the two lines in question is to this purpose: But why need we wonder at this abundance of evil? For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, which, though a God, yet shedding its heat and influence upon carrion—- Here he stops short, lest talking too consequentially the hearer should suspect his madness to be feigned, and so turns him off from the subject by enquiring of his daughter. But the inference which he intended to make was a very noble one, and to this purpose. If this (says he) be the case that the effect follows the thing operated upon [carrion], and not the thing operating [a God], why need we wonder that the supreme cause of all things diffusing its blessings on mankind, who is, as it were, a dead carrion, dead in original sin, man, instead of a proper return of duty, should breed only corruption and vices? This is the argument at length, and is as noble a one in behalf of Providence as could come from the schools of divinity. But this wonderful man had an art not only of acquainting the audience with what his actors say, but with what they think. The sentiment, too, is altogether in character, for Hamlet is perpetually moralizing, and his circumstances make this reflection very natural. The same thought, something diversified, as on a different occasion, Sh. uses again in
ACT II, SC. ii.]

Meas. for Meas. II, ii, 163–168, which will serve to confirm these observations. And the same kind of expression is in Cymb. III, iv, 164, 'Common-kissing Titan.' JOHNSON: This is a noble emendation, which almost sets the critic on a level with the author. MALONE: Hamlet has just remarked that honesty is very rare in the world. To this Polonius assents. The prince then adds, that since there is so little virtue in the world, since corruption abounds everywhere, and maggots are bred by the sun, even in a dead dog, Polonius ought to take care to prevent his daughter from walking in the sun, lest she should prove a breeder of sinners; for, though conception in general be a blessing, yet as Ophelia (whom Hamlet supposes to be as frail as the rest of the world) might chance to conceive, it might be a calamity. The maggots breeding in a dead dog seem to have been mentioned merely to introduce the word conception, on which word, as Steevens has observed, Sh. has played in King Lear; and probably a similar quibble was intended here. The word, however, may have been used in its ordinary sense, for pregnancy, without any double meaning. The slight connection between this and the preceding passage and Hamlet's abrupt question, 'Have you a daughter?' were manifestly intended more strongly to impress Polonius with the belief of the prince's madness. Perhaps this passage ought rather to be regulated thus: 'being a god-kissing carrion,' i.e. a carrion that kisses the sun. The participle being naturally refers to the last antecedent, dog. Had Sh. intended that it should be referred to sun, he would probably have written, 'he being a god,' &c. We have many similar compound epithets in these plays. Thus, in Lear, II, i, 9, Curan speaks of 'ear-kissing arguments.' Again, more appositely, in the play before us, III, iv, 59, 'heaven-kissing.' Again, in R. of L. 1370, 'cloud-kissing.' However, the instance quoted from Cymb. by Warburton seems in favor of the regulation that has been hitherto made; for here we find the poet considered the sun as kissing the carrion, not the carrion as kissing the sun. So also, in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 113, 'Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter?' The following lines, also, in the historical play of King Edward III, 1596, which Sh. had certainly seen, are, it must be acknowledged, adverse to the regulation I have suggested: 'The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint The loathed carrion, that it seems to kiss.' WHITIER, whose opinions deserve respect, fails to make a clear explanation of the text of Qj, which he upholds. He says (p. 149) that Sh. considers the 'blessed breeding sun' as the Good principle in the fecundity of the earth, and that in the present passage the train of thought in Hamlet's mind is somewhat thus: There is so little honesty left in the world, the world has become so degenerate, that even what is bad becomes worse by contact with what is good. The Sun itself, though a Good, in general the source of what is excellent, be comes the origin of corruption; we find this Good, by contact with carrion, breeding maggots. Why, therefore, may not Ophelia herself become tainted, and become a breeder of sinners? Let her not walk in the sun,—keep her removed from all possibility of contamination,—even from communication with those natures which in general appear possessed of good and virtuous principles. Dread the consequences of exposing her to the temptation of the world. COLERIDGE: These purposely obscure lines, I rather think, refer to some thought in Hamlet's mind, contrasting the lovely daughter with such a tedious old fool, her father, as he, Hamlet, represents Polonius to himself: 'Why, fool as he is, he is some degrees in rank above a dead dog's carcass; and if the sun, being a god that kisses carrion, can raise life out of a dead dog, why may not good fortune, that favors fools, have raised a lovely girl out of this dead-alive old fool?" The subsequent passage, line 384, is confirmatory of my view of these lines. CALDWELL: As it would be too forced a sense to say that Sh. calls the sun 'a good kissing carrion,' we have nothing better to offer than that this passage may mean that the dead dog is good for the sun, the breeder of maggots, to kiss for the purpose of causing putrefaction, and so conceiving or generating anything carrion-like, anything apt quickly to contract taint in the sunshine; good at catching or drawing the rays or kisses of 'common kissing Titan.' MITFORD (Geni. Maga. 1845): Read 'carrion-kissing god,' formed like heaven-kissing, cloud-kissing, &c. KNIGHT: The carcass is good at kissing, ready to return the kiss of the sun,—common kissing Titan,—and in the bitterness of his satire Hamlet associates the idea with the daughter of Polonius. COLLIER: 'Good' could hardly have been a misprint for God, as in the latter case it would most likely have been written with a capital letter. DELISIUS (ed. 1): Hamlet calls the dog, in which the sun breeds maggots, a good, kissing carrion, alluding to the confiding, fawning manner of the dog towards his master. If the sun breed maggots in the dead dog, which, when alive, was so trusting, what, says Hamlet in his bitterness and to annoy Polonius,—what could not the sun breed in the delicate Ophelia? who, therefore, ought not to expose herself to it. [This is omitted in the ed. of 1871. Ed.] DYCIE: I give Warburton's emendation, which, if overpraised by Johnson, at least has the merit of conveying something like a meaning. That not even a tolerable sense can be tortured out of the original reading we have proof positive in the various explanations of it by its advocates. COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) evidently gave up the passage as inexplicable, and put his pen through the lines 180-185. MAGINN (p. 246): Hamlet, in his affection of craziness, proceeds to hint that the consequences of exposing a young lady to the temptations of persons in high rank, or of warm blood, may be dangerous, and couples the outer assertion that the sun can breed maggots with a reference to Polonius's daughter. Let her not put herself in the peculiar danger to which I allude, and to which her father's performing the part of a fishmonger [i.e. a purveyor of loose fish] may lead. The sun is a good-kissing carrion,—(caroena—it is a word which occurs elsewhere in Sh. Quickly, in the Merry Wives, is called a carrion, &c.), a baggage fond of kissing. In Hen. IV, Prince Hal compares the sun to a fair hot wench in flame-colored taffeta; and if the sun can breed maggots in a dead dog, who knows what may happen elsewhere? WHITE: The correction, which is almost of the obvious sort, was made by Warburton, who improved the occasion in a small sermon. This speech of Hamlet's has an intimate connection in thought and in expression with his next; the thought being one which his madness, real or affected, may excuse, but upon which it is not pleasant to dwell, much less to expatiate. STAUNTON: We adopt the now almost universally accepted correction of Warburton. At the same time we dissent, tuto calo, from the reasoning by which he and other commentators have sought to connect the sentence in which it occurs with what Hamlet had previously said. The circumstance of the prince coming in reading, that he evinces the utmost intolerance of the old courtier's interruptions, and rejoices in his departure, serve, in our opinion, to show that Sh. intended the actor should manifest his wish to be alone, after the lines 177, 178, in the most unmistakable manner, by walking away and appearing to resume his study; that then, finding Polonius still watching him, he should turn sharply round with the abrupt question, 'Have you a daughter?' It is this view of the stage business which prompted us to print the passage above [line 180. For... carrion] as something read, or affected to be read, by Hamlet,—an innovation—if it be one (for we are ignorant whether it has been suggested previously)—that will the more readily be pardoned, since the passage, as usually exhibited, has hitherto defied solution.

Heussi: 'Kissing' is used in a passive sense; a contrast is drawn between carrion and bad men. The former is praised, because the dead dog is a carrion that fulfills all requirement of carrion, whereas men are inferior to that which they should be.

Tschischwitz: The meaning is clear. If the sun, a good being, condescends so far as to kiss, etc. [He therefore transposes the words in the text, 'being a good,' and reads a good being, Ed.] Hudson: God is probably right. A great deal of ink has been spent in trying to explain the passage; but the true explanation is, that it is not meant to be understood. Hamlet is merely bantering and tantalizing the old man. Moerly: Warburton's explanation is excellent. Clarendon: There can be little doubt of the truth of Warburton's emendation. Corson: The defect in this passage is due to one thing, and one thing only, and that is, to the understanding of 'kissing' as the present active participle, and not as the verbal noun. In the following passages the present active participle is used: 'Life's but a walking shadow,' Macb. V, v, 24; *Look, here comes a walking fire,' Lear, III, iv, 110; 'the dancing banners of the French,' King John, II, i, 308; 'my dancing soul doth celebrate This feast,' Rich. II: I, iii, 91; 'laboring art can never ransom nature,' All's Well, II, i, 116; 'more busy than the laboring spider,' 2 Hen. VI: III, i, 339; 'And let the laboring bark climb hills of seas,' Oth. II, i, 184; 'thy parting soul,' 1 Hen. VI: II, v, 115; 'parting guest,' Tro. & Cres. III, iii, 166; 'a falling fabric,' Cor. III, i, 247; 'this breathing world,' Rich. III: I, i, 21; 'O blessed breeding sun,' Tim. of Ath. IV, iii, 1. But in the following passages the same words are verbal nouns used adjectively: 'a Palmer's walking-staff,' Rich. II: III, iii, 151; 'you and I are past our dancing days,' Rom. & Jul. I, v, 29; 'you ought not walk Upon a laboring day,' Jul. Cæs. I, i, 4; 'Give him that parting kiss,' Cymb. I, iii, 34; 'what store of parting tears were shed?' Rich. II: I, iv, 51; 'the falling sickness,' Jul. Cæs. I, ii, 252; 'scarce breathing while,' Rich. III: I, iii, 60; 'it is the breathing time of day with me,' Ham. V, ii, 165. And now we are all ready for 'kissing.' In the following passages it is the participle: 'A kissing traitor,' Love's L. L. V, ii, 592; Cymb. III, iv, 164; 'O, how ripe in show Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow,' Mid. N. D. III, ii, 140. 'Kissing,' in the last passage, might be taken for the verbal noun, meaning, for kissing, or, to be kissed; but it must here be understood as the participle. Demetrius speaks of the lips of Helena as two ripe cherries that kiss, or lightly touch each other. But to say of a pair of beautiful lips, that they are good kissing lips, would convey quite a different meaning,—a meaning, however, which nobody would mistake; 'kissing,' in such expression, is the verbal noun used adjectively, and equivalent to 'for kissing.' And so the word is used in the present passage in Hamlet. That is, a dead dog being, not a carrion good at kissing (which would be the sense of the word as a present active participle), but a carrion good for kissing, or, to be kissed, by the sun, that thus breeds a plentiful crop of maggots therein, the agency of 'breed' being implied in 'kissing.' In reading this speech, the emphasis should be upon 'kissing,' and not upon 'carrion,' the idea of which last word is anticipated in ‘dead dog;’ in other words, ‘kissing carrion’ should be read as a compound noun, which, in fact, it is, the stress of sound falling on the member of the compound which bears the burden of the meaning. The two words might, indeed, be hyphenated, like ‘Kissing-comfits,’ in Merry Wives, V, v, 19. The life-awakening power of the sun is expressed in the following passages, which commentators have not quoted, I believe, in illustration of the passage in Hamlet: ‘By the fire That quickens Nilus’ slime,’ Ant. & Cleo. I, iii, 69; ‘Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of the sun: so is your crocodile,’ II, vii, 26. [This note is so exhaustive and so conclusive that, although the interpretation which it offers has been anticipated by Caldecott, I have nevertheless given it almost at full length. Ed.]

183. conception] STEEVES: There is a quibble here, similar to that in Lear, I, i, 12, between ‘conception,’ understanding, and ‘conceive,’ to be pregnant. MOBERLY: Understanding is a blessing; but if you leave your daughter unrestrained, she will understand what you would not like. CORSON: He says what he does to make the old man uneasy, meaning that though conception is a blessing in the legitimate way, it wouldn’t be as his daughter might conceive,—out of wedlock.

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean, the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir; for the satirical rogue says here that old men have grey beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber and plum-tree gum, and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams; all which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for you yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if like a crab you could go backward.

Farmer: There was a translation of this satire by Sir John Beaumont, elder brother of the famous Francis; but I cannot tell whether it was printed in Shakespeare’s time. Clarendon: It is at least as probable, without attributing to Sh. any unusual amount of originality, that he invented this speech for himself.

201. for yourself] Morely: The natural reason would have been, ‘For some time I shall be as old as you are now’ (and, therefore, I take such sayings as proleptically personal). But Hamlet turns it to the opposite. Corson: It is not likely that Sh. meant that Hamlet should talk nonsense here, but rather that he should express himself in a way to puzzle the old man. It would seem that ‘old’ is used, not as opposed to ‘young,’ but as denoting age in general. So that the expression really means, ‘you yourself, sir, should be young as I am, if,’ &c.

Hamlet to encourage the belief of his insanity. He never indulges in this cuckoo-note unless with those whom he distrusts. CLARKE: Not only is this iteration a part of Hamlet’s feigned insanity, but it is profoundly pathetic, as conveying that im-

CALDECOTT: At this rate, and if it be true that lofty aims are no more than air, our beggars only have the nature of substance; and our monarchs and those who are blazoned so far abroad as to be thought materially to fill so much space, are, in fact, shadows, and in imagination only gigantic. HUDSON: Hamlet loses himself in the riddles he is making. The meaning, however, seems to be: our beggars can at least dream of being kings and heroes; and if the substance of such ambitious men is but a dream, and if a dream is but a shadow, then our kings and heroes are but the shadows of our beggars. BUCKNILL (p. 76): If ambition is but a shadow, something beyond ambition must be the substance from which it is thrown. If ambition, represented by a king, is a shadow, the antitype of ambition, represented by a beggar, must be the opposite of the shadow, that is, the substance. MOBERLY: If ambition is the shadow of pomp, and pomp the shadow of a man, then the only true substantial men are beggars, who are strip of all pomp and of all ambition.

Compare Chaucer, Cant. Tales, 8875: 'dere y-nough a jaye' (i.e. a coin of Genoa); and 12723, 'deere y-nough a lecke.' Also, 'too late a week,' As You Like It, II, iii, 74.

272. but] STAUNTON: That is, only to the purpose. CLARKE: It here signifies 'only let it be;' while it includes the effect of 'except,' and therefore conveys the covert sarcasm felt by Hamlet.

274. modesties] DELIUS: A jocose style of address, like 'your majesties.' ELZE: It is simply the plural of the abstract noun, in accordance with a usage common to Sh. and all English writers. See 'I am doubtful of your modesties.'—Taym. of Sk., Ind., i, 94. [See I, i, 173.]

279, 280. by...withal] TSCHISCHWITZ: The addition of 'withal' ought to have revealed to modern editors the error of the old text; no explanation is offered by them of the use of two prepositions for one object. It is evident that, after using 'by' three times, the climax is reached only by using it as a substantive in the last clause; the sense therefore is: 'with what more dear "by" a better proposer could charge you.' [Thus the pure English of William Shakespeare is amended by Benno Tschischwitz! Ed.]

280. proposer] CALDECOTT: An advocate of more address in shaping his aims, who could make a stronger appeal.

282. What say you?] DELIUS: Perhaps this question is addressed to Hamlet, in order to gain time and evade, if possible, a direct answer. Furthermore, I doubt if Sh. intended Hamlet's reply to be spoken as an Aside. Nowhere does Hamlet take much pains to conceal the distrust with which he regards these false friends, and he does not hesitate here to let them see that he has an eye on them.

283. an eye of you] STEVENS: A glimpse of your meaning. CALDECOTT: An eye upon or after you; a sharp lookout. ['Of' is used for on. See II, ii, 27. Ed.]

285. prevent] CALDECOTT: That is, be beforehand with your discovery, and the plume and gloss of your secret pledge be in no feather shed or tarnished. CLARENCEON: That is, anticipate, and so stop. HUDSON: Hamlet's fine sense of honor is well shown in this. He will not tempt them to any breach of confidence; by telling them the reason, he will forestall and prevent their disclosure of it.

286. STRACHEY (p. 53): This speech, like all others of the same kind throughout the rest of the play, is in prose. That the inferior interlocutors in the dialogue speak in prose also is, of course, sufficiently explained by the natural tendency of every man to carry on a conversation in the tone which the chief speaker gives it. But why Hamlet himself speaks prose is explained by comparing his prose with his verse speeches. We then find that he always returns to verse as the language of his practical life, whether in relation to feeling or to action; whereas, while he speaks prose, he is uttering the thoughts of the bystander and looker-on, contemplatvent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen 287

ing, or aiming at contemplating, the world, with the cold passionless eye of the intellect. I say aiming at contemplating, for Hamlet is too young and ardent, and his griefs are too fresh, for his skepticism to become the real habit of his soul; and, accordingly, we see a bitter self-consciousness working up through it at every moment. Still, in as far as it is the looking on of a spectator, and not the participation of an actor, it is passionless, at least in form,—the reading out of a book, rather than the utterance of living speech.

287. discovery] ABBOTT, § 439: This is often used for uncovering, i. e. unfold, whether literally or metaphorically. Here 'render your dis-closure needless by anticipation.'

289. lost] WARBURTON: This is artfully imagined to hide the true cause of his disorder from the penetration of these spies.

289. exercises] TIÈCK (Krit. Schriften, iii, 280): We must not take too literally what Hamlet says here, else it contradicts what he says to Horatio, V, ii, 198, that he had been in continual practice since Laertes went into France.

291. promontory] Moberly: Thrust out into the dread ocean of the unknown, and as barren as the waves themselves.

292. brave o'erhanging] WALKER (Crit. i, 38) thinks these words should be hyphenated. The Folio's omission of 'firmament' probably originated in the similar commencements firmament, fretted.

293. firmament] KNIGHT: Using 'o'erhanging' as a substantive, and omitting
'firmament,' the sentence is, perhaps, less eloquent, but more coherent. The air is the canopy; the o'erhanging; the majestical roof. Here there are three distinct references to the common belief of the three regions of air. Ben Jonson, in his description of the scenery of the Masque of Hymen, has this passage: 'A cortine of painted clouds...opening, revealed the three regions of air; in the highest of which sat Juno, etc., her feet reaching to the lowest, where was a rainbow, and within it airy spirits, their habits...resembling the several colours caused in that part of the air by reflection. The midst was all of dark and condensed clouds; &c. The 'canopy,' we believe, is the lowest region of 'colors caused by reflection; the 'o'erhanging,' the midst of 'dark and condensed clouds; the 'majestical roof fretted,' &c., the highest, where Juno sat. The air, in its three regions, appears to Hamlet no other thing 'than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapors.' If this interpretation be it appears no other thing to me than a soul and pestilent conglobation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! 295 how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angle! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me; no, nor woman 300 neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, then, when I said 'man delights not me'?

306. lenten] STEEVENS: Sparing, like the entertainments given in Lent. COLLIER: Such entertainment as players met with in Lent, when they were often not allowed to perform. This explanation Dyer (Gloss.) pronounces erroneous. HALLIWEIL: Our ancestors seem to have used this adjective constantly in a sense of deterioration. Cotgrave defines 'Amoureux de caresse: A Lenten lover; a bashfull, modest, or maidenly woer; one that's afraid to touch his mistresse.'

307. coted] STEEVENS: Overtook. In The Return from Parnassus, 1606: 'may we presently coted and outstrip them.' 'In the laws of courting,' says Tollet, 'a cote is when a greyhound goes endways by the side of his fellow, and gives the hare a turn.' NAVES: To pass by, to pass the side of another. It was a common sporting term. 'Each man... note Which dog first turns the hare, which first the other coats.'—Drayton, Polyolb. xxiii, p. 1115. CALDECOTT cites from Golding's translation of Ovid, Met. B, x: 'With that Hippomenes coted her' (where the original has 'præterit'). Dyer (Gloss.): Compare what Rosencrantz afterwards says of these players, III, i, 17: 'certain players. We o'er- fraught (overtook, over-passed) on the way.' ANONYMOUS (New Shakespearean Interpretations). Edin. Rev. Oct. 1872): Cot, in the language of venery, is applied to a brace of greyhounds slipped together at the stag or hare, and means that one of the dogs outstrips the other and reaches the game first. Thus we find in Terturbville: 'In coursing at Dace, if one Greyhound go endways by [that is beyond] another, it is accompted a Cote.' Again, 'In coursing at the Hare, it is not material which dog kylleth her (which hunters call bearing of an Hare), but he that giveth most Cotes, or most turns, winithe the wager. A Cote is when a Greyhound goeth endways by his fellow and giveth the Hare a turn (which is called setting the Hare about), but if he coast and so come by his fellow, that is no Cote. Likewise, if one Greyhound doe go by another, and then be not able to reach the Hare himselfe and turne her, this is but stripping, and no Cote.' To cote is thus not simply to overtake, but to over-pass, to outstrip, this being the distinctive meaning of the term. Going beyond is the essential point, the term being usually applied under circumstances where overtaking is impossible,—to dogs who start together and run abreast until the cote takes place. So Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, having coted the players in their way, reach the palace first, and have been for some time in conversation with Hamlet before the strolling company arrives.
shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle o' the sere,

312. humorous] CALDECOTT: The fretful or capricious man shall vent the whole of his spleen undisturbed. STAUNTON: Not the funny man, or jester,—he was termed 'the clown,'—but the actor who personated the fantastic characters, known in Shakespear's time as 'humourists,' and who, for the most part, were represented as capricious and quarrelsome. DELIUS: Such characters as Faulconbridge, Jaques, and Mercutio. The 'clown' is next referred to.

313. tickle o' the sere] CAPELL (Gloss. s.v. sere): Tickled, or delighted with the dry jokes of the character spoken of. STEEVENS: That is, those who are asthmatical, and to whom laughter is most uneasy. This is the case (I am told) with those whose lungs are tickled by the sere or serum. MALONE: The word 'sere' I am unable to explain, and suspect it to be corrupt. Perhaps we should read: 'ticked o' the scene,' i.e. by the scene. DOUCE: The same expression occurs in Howard's Defensive against the suppos'd prophecies, 1620: 'Discovering the moods and humors of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the sears,' &c., fol. 31. Every one has felt that dry tickling in the throat and lungs which excites coughing. Hamlet's meaning may be, 'the clown shall overflow even their coughing into laughter.' WHITE: The whole speech is ironical, and here, as in his famous directions to the players, Hamlet is severest upon the Clown, who, he says, will have to be content with such semblance of laughter as comes from those who are tickled not by his jokes, but by a dry cough,—o' the sere.' STAUNTON: Correctly, perhaps, 'tickle o' the sere.' It appears to signify those easily moved to the expression of mirth. HALLIWELL: Light of the sears is equivalent to light-heeled, loose in character. Tickles of the sear, wanton, immodest. In the present passage it means those whose lungs are wanton, or excited to laughter by coarse ribaldry. See the following (cited by Steevens): 'She that...will abyde whysperynge in the eare, 'Thynke ye her tayle is not lyght of the seare.'—Commune Secretary and Jalousye, ed. Hindley, vol. i, p. 41. NICHOLSON (N. & Q. 22 July, 1871): The sere, or, as it is now spelt, sear (or sear) of a gun-lock is the bar or balance-lever interposed between the trigger on the one side, and the tumbler and other mechanism on the other, and is so called from its acting the part of a sear, or talon, in gripping that mechanism and preventing its action. It is, in fact, a pair or stop-catch. When the trigger is made to act on one end of it, the other end releases the tumbler, the mainspring acts, and the hammer, flint, or match falls. Hence Lombard (1596), as quoted in Halliwell's Archaic Dict., says, 'Even as a pistole that is ready charged and bent will flye off by-and-by, if a man do but touch the seare.' Now if the lock be so made of purpose, or be worn, or be faulty in construction, this sear, or grip, may be so tickle or ticklish in its adjustment that a slight touch or even jar may displace it, and then, of course, the gun goes off. Hence 'light,' or 'tickle of the sear' (equivalent to, like a hair-trigger), applied metaphorically, means that which can be started into action at a mere touch, or on the slightest provocation, or on what ought to be no provocation at all. CLARENDON: The real meaning is just the reverse of 'those to whom laughter is most uneasy.' In old matchlock muskets the sear and trigger were in one piece. This is proved by a passage from Barret's Theorite and Practise of Modern Warres, 1598, p. 33 [35]: 'drawing down the serre with the other three fingers.' He has given directions for holding the stock between the thumb and forefinger. It is clear that Hamlet did not anticipate much from the wit of the clown, or from the players generally.

314. lady] JOHNSON: The lady shall have no obstruction, unless from the lame-ness of the verse. HENDERSON: The lady shall mar the measure of the verse rather than not express herself freely or fully. SEYMOUR: If the lady, through affectation of delicacy, should suppress anything, her omission will be detected in the lameness of the metre.

318. travel] MALONE: A technical word, for which we have substituted stroll.
320. inhibition] 'What "inhibition"?' asks THEOBALD (Nichols, Lit. Hist. ii, 562). 'If Rosencrans meant to answer Hamlet's question closely, methinks it should be stutation.' This is not repeated in Theobald's ed. / JOHNSON: Hamlet inquires not about an 'inhibition,' but an 'innovation'; the answer probably was: —'I think their innovation,' that is, their new practice of strolling, 'comes by means of the late inhibition.' STEVENS: Any change in the order of the words is quite unnecessary. Rosencrans means that their permission to act any longer at an established house is taken away in consequence of the new custom of introducing personal abuse into their comedies. Several companies of actors in the time of Sh. were silenced on account of this licentious practice. MALONE: Sh. could not mean to charge his friends, the old tragedians, with the new custom of introducing personal abuse, but rather must have meant, that the old tragedians were inhibited from performing in the city and obliged to travel on account of the misconduct of the younger company. And he could not have directed his satire at those young men who played occasionally at his own theatre. Jonson's Cynthia's Revels and Poetaster were performed there by the Children of Queen Elizabeth's chapel in 1600 and 1601; and Eastward Hoe by the Children of the Revels in 1604 or 1605. I have no doubt, therefore, that the present dialogue was pointed at the choir boys of St Paul's, who in 1601 acted two of Marston's plays: Antonio and Mellida, and

_Antonio's Revenge._ Many of Lyly's plays were represented by them about the same time; and, in 1607, Chapman's _Bussy d'Ambois_ was performed by them with great applause. It was probably in this and some other noisy tragedies of the same kind that they 'cried out on the top of question, and were most tyrannically clapped for it.'

The licentiousness of the stage is noticed in a letter from Mr Samuel Calvert to Mr Winwood, 28 March, 1605, which might lead us to infer that the words found only in the Folio were added at that time: 'The plays do not forbear to present upon the stage the whole course of this present time, not sparing the king, state, or religion, in so great absurdity and with such liberty that any would be afraid to hear them.'— _Memorial_, ii, 54. Or the words in the Folio might have been added in 1612, in which year Heywood's _Apologie for Actors_ was published, containing the following passage, which leads us to infer that the little _eyes_ were the persons guilty of the late innovation, or practice of introducing personal abuse on the stage: 'Now to speak of some abuse lately crept into the quality, as in inveighing against the State, the Court, the Law, the City, and their governements, with the particularizing of private mens humors (yet alive) Noble-men & others. I know it distastes many; neither do I any way approue it, nor dare I by any means excuse it. The liberty which some arrogate to themselves, committing their bitternesses, and liberall iniquities against all estates, to the mouths of Children, supposing their juniority to be a proouedged for any rayling, by it more so violent, I could advise all such, to curbe and limit this presumed liberty within the bands of discretion and governement. But wise and juditial Censors, before whom such complaints shall at any time hereafter come, will not (I hope) impute these abuses to any transgression in vs, who haue euer been carefull and prouident to shun the like.' _Caldecott_ thinks that they were obliged to travel because of the license granted to a new description of actors, who had met with the most extravagant applauses and success. _Collier_ says, that this passage probably refers to the limiting of public theatrical performances to the two theatres, the Globe on the Bankside, and the Fortune in Golden Lane, in 1600 and 1601. The players, by a 'late innovation,' were 'inhibited,' or for-bidden, to act in or near 'the city,' and therefore travelled, or 'strolled,' into the _Clarleton_ doubts the validity of Steevens's explanation of the 'inhibition,' and thinks that the 'late innovation' does not clearly refer to the introduction of personal abuse on the stage, and adds the following conclusive note: For a very long period there had been a strong opposition in the city to theatrical performances. In March, 1573-4, the Lord Mayor and Corporation declined to license a place for them within the city. In 1575 players were again forbidden to act there, and in consequence, in 1576, the Blackfriars Theatre was built without the limits of the jurisdiction of the city. In 1581 the Lord Mayor was ordered to allow performances in the city by certain companies of actors on week days only, being holidays; but his inhibition must have remained still in force, because in the following year, 1582, the Lords of the Council pray the Lord Mayor to revoke his inhibition against playning on holidays. In 1589 Lord Burleigh appears to have directed the Lord Mayor to silence the players of the Lord Admiral's and the Lord Strange's companies for introducing matters of state and religion upon the stage. To this apparently Nash alludes in his _Return of the renowned Cavaliere Pasquile of England_, published in 1589. In this year, also, proposals were made to appoint two commissioners to act with the Master of the Revels for the purpose of examining and licensing every play, and so restraining the abuses of the actors. About the year 1590 the Children of St Paul’s were silenced, and the interdict was apparently not removed till about 1600. In 1597 the Lord Admiral’s players were restrained for a time from playing in consequence of having brought out Nash’s Isle of Dogs, a play in which personal satire was probably introduced, and for which the author was imprisoned. In 1601 a letter was addressed by the Lords of the Council to certain Justices of the Peace in the county of Middlesex in which the actors at the Curtain Theatre, Shore ditch, are charged with satirising living persons and introducing personalities into their plays. It is difficult, therefore, to see at what precise period the explanation offered by Steevens could be true. In 1604 the indulgence of the actors in personal abuse could hardly be called an ‘innovation,’ on the contrary, it was a practice from which the stage had never been entirely free. If we were to add to the con-jectures upon this point, we should be disposed to suggest that the ‘innovation’ referred to was the license which had been given on 30 Jan. 1603–4 to the Children of the Queen’s Revels to play at the Blackfriars Theatre and other convenient places.

The Blackfriars Theatre belonged to the company of which Sh. was a member, formerly the Lord Chamberlain’s and at this time His Majesty’s servants. The popularity of the Children may well have driven the older actors into the country and so have operated as an ‘inhibition,’ though in the strict sense of the word no formal ‘inhibition’ was issued. If by ‘inhibition’ Sh. merely meant, as we think most probable, that the actors were practically thrown out of employment, it seems also likely that by ‘innovation’ he meant the authority given to the Children to act at the regularly licensed theatres. It must be borne in mind, in reference to this, that nothing is said either of ‘inhibition’ or ‘innovation’ in Q., 1603, but that the sentence containing both is first introduced in Q., 1604. It is to the interval, therefore, that we must look for the explanation. In offering this conjecture we have not lost sight of the fact that, after all, remembering how chary Sh. is of contemporary allusions, no special occurrence may be hinted at, although in what follows in the Folio edition a satire upon the Children’s performances was clearly intended. In Chalmers’ Further Account of the Early English Stage (Var.’21, iii, 423–429) will be found a list of payments, at sundry times during the reign of Elizabeth, to the Children of Paul’s, Westminster, Windsor, and the Chapel Royal, and an enumeration of the plays performed by them and by the Children of the Revels from 1571 to 1633.
The quotation cited by Malone from Heywood shows, indeed, that the Children indulged in personalities, but not that any ‘inhibition’ was the consequence. Besides, it refers to a subsequent date. Fleay (Sh. Manual, p. 41): This is not necessarily to be applied to the first order of the Privy Council for the restraint of the immoderate use of playhouses (made 22 June, 1600), for this order proved ineffectual; but rather to their second order, made 31 Dec., 1601. The Fortune and The Globe were allowed to remain open; the others were closed, owing to the personal allusions indulged in by some of the companies. [See note III, ii, 267. Ed.]

They had as well be at their popish service in the devil’s garments,’ &c. Again, ibid: ‘Even in her majesties chapel do these pretty upstart youghtes profane the Lords day by the lascivious whirling of their tender limbs, and gorgeous decking of their apparel, in feigning bawdie fables gathered from the idolatrous heathen poets,’ &c. Concerning the performances and success of the latter in attracting the best company, I also find the following passage in Touch Drum’s Entertainmen, or Pasquil and Katherine, 1601:

‘I saw the children of Pomele last night;
And troth they pleas’d me pretty, pretty well,
The aeries, in time, will do it handomely.
— I like the audience that frequeth there
With much applause: a man shall not be chock’d
With the stench of garlick, nor be pasted
To the balmy jacket of a beer-brewer.
— Tis a good gentle audience,’ &c.

It is said in Richard Flecknoe’s Short Discourse of the English Stage, 1664, that ‘both the children of the chappel and St Paul’s, acted players, the one in White-Frier’s, the other behind the Convocation-house in Paul’s; till people growing more precise, and players more licentious, the theatre of Paul’s was quite suppress’d, and that of the children of the chappel converted to the use of the children of the revels.’

328. top of question] Johnson: They ask a common question in the highest note of the voice. Steevens: Question here signifies conversation, dialogue. The meaning therefore is: Children that perpetually recite in the highest notes of voice that can be uttered. M. Mason: When we ask a question, we generally end the sentence with a high note. These children, therefore, declaim, through the whole of their parts, in the high note commonly used at the end of a question, and are applauded for it. conversation; namely, that point where the dialogue is most lively, where question and answer follow each other stroke on stroke, and the speakers are the most excited. These 'little cases,' therefore, continually cry out as though they were at the very height of conversation. STAUTON: The phrase, derived perhaps from the defiant crowing of a cock upon his midden, really meant, we believe, like—Soood challenger on mount of all the age, to crow over or challenge all comers to a contention. In line 424, Hamlet uses the phrase, 'cried in the top,' where it evidently means crowded over. Again, in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, the author, alluding to fencers or players at single stick, talks of 'making them expert till they cry it up in the top of question.' [p. 55, 5th Soc. vol. x.] WHITE: To 'cry in the top' seems rather to mean to assume superiority— as afterwards Hamlet, speaking of people who set him down about the play from which he quotes, says their judgments 'cried in the top' of his. I can conjecture no specific origin of the phrase. It might well have been formed on the mere general force of the words which compose it. WELLESLEY: 'Question' is not conversation, dialogue, but the old word, still in use in other languages, for the rack. The pulleys were strained, and the witnesses hoisted to the utmost height, till the desired confession was elicited; and so the phrase, 'top of question,' came to be metaphorically applied; as, for instance, to the highest stretch of the voice or the utmost force of an argument. The top of the bent [III, ii, 367] was a phrase of the same kind, borrowed from those bows which were not bent by hand, but by a rack. 'These bows... were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used with others.'—Wilkins's Mathematical Magick. DYCE (Gloss.): Recite at the very highest pitch of the voice. Wellesley's explanation is wrong. Tschischwitz: I am convinced that this phrase in the MS was: that cry on the top, out of question; that is, they cry at the highest pitch of the voice, where it is wholly inappropriate. [And even so is the text amended. Ed.] CLARKE: That is, pipe out their parts at the top of their shrill infantine voices. CLARENDON: Probably, to speak in a high key, dominating conversation. For 'question' in this sense, see Mer. of Ven. IV, 1, 70.

328. tyrannically] CALDECOTT: That is, receive outrageous, extravagant applause. CLARENDON: The tyrant's part in the old plays was a noisy one. See Mid. N. D. I, ii, 31. Compare Beau. and Fl., The Knight of the Burning Pestle, V, i, 'And thou hadst but seen little Ned of Aldgate, drum Ned, how he made it roar again, and laid on like a tyrant.'

329. fashion] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. 67): The emendation of faction we owe to Mr. Hughes; it implies that those children were not only in fashion, but had a faction made by the town in their favor. [Has a copy of the edition by 'the accurate Mr Hughes' ever been found? See Vol. II, p. 35. Ed.]

330. stages] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. 67) conjectured stages, that is, professed actors, to whom a degree of cowardice might be imputed, which Sh. would never have imputed to gentlemen spectators. HEATH thought highly of this emendation. although Theobald did not adopt it in his text.

331. goose-quills] CALDECOTT: Lampoons. ELZE: This refers to 'the writers,'
Ham. What, are they children? who maintains 'em? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players,—as it is 335 most like, if their means are no better,—their players do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

In line 336. Morebly: These young hawks make such a noise on the common stage, that true dramatics, whose wit is as strong and keen as a rapier, are afraid to encounter these clits, who fight, as it were, with a goose-quill.

333. escoted] Dyce (Glass): Paid. 'Escot, A shot. . . . Escoter, Eyery one to pay his shot, &c.—Cotgrave. Tschirschwitz: It is very doubtful whether Sh. used so uncommon a word as 'escoted' when the common one, maintains, was ready to his use. 'I therefore believe that the true word is escorted.' Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 68) calls attention to what he calls the 'self-contradiction' here, in making Hamlet show a knowledge of their singing after 'he had professed himself a stranger' to them.

333. quality] Johnson: Will they follow the profession of players no longer than they can keep the voices of boys? So also in line 412. Malone: So in Gosson's Schoole of Abuse (p. 39, ed. Arber), 1579: 'I speake not this, as though eyrue one [of our players] that professeth the qualitie so abused him selfe.' Gifford (Massinger's Roman Actor, Works ii, 339): 'Quality,' though used in a general sense for any occupation, calling, or condition of life, yet seems more peculiarly appropriated, by our old writers, to that of a player. See also The Picture, vol. iii, p. 141. Clarendon: So in Two Gent. IV, i. 58, 'in our quality,' i.e. in our profession of brigands.

335. common players] Staughton: As we now term them, 'strolling players.' 'I prefix an epithite of common, to distinguish the base and artlesse appendants of our City companies, which often times start away into rustical wanderers, and then (like Proteus) start backe again into the City number.'—J. Stephens, Essays and Characters, 1615, p. 301.

338. to-do] Hudson: This is the same as ado. Conson: 'In place of this to-do, the King's English accepted a composition, part French, part English, and hence the substantive ado.'—Earle's Philology of the Engl. Tongue, ed. 2, p. 420.

338. both sides] Tschirschwitz finds this speech obscure, because it seems as though it were a reply to what Hamlet has just said, whereas, so he says, it merely resumes the connection of thought which was broken by Hamlet's questions about the children. He therefore thinks that logic demands the insertion of Hamlet's speech, lines 332–337, after 'clapped for it.' and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversy; there was for a while no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too. 345

Ham. It is not very strange; for my uncle is king of Denmark, and those that would make mows at him while my father lived give twenty, forty, fifty, a hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something

343. brains.] Caldecott: Sharp and nice discussion.

345. Hercules] Warburton: They not only carry away the world, but the world-bearer too; alluding to the story of Hercules relieving Atlas. Steevens: The allusion may be to the Globe theatre, the sign of which was Hercules carrying the Globe. Malone: I suppose Sh. meant that the boys drew greater audiences than the elder players of the Globe theatre. Collier (ed. 2): In Q, there are sufficient traces of this part of the scene to enable us to be certain that it was acted when the play was originally produced; it was omitted, therefore, for some unexplained reason in 1604, and restored entire in 1623.

346. strange] Johnson: I do not wonder that the new players have so suddenly risen to reputation; my uncle supplies another example of the facility with which honor is conferred upon new claimants.

347. mows] Nares: A distortion of the face, made in ridicule. See Cymb. 1, vi, 41, and Psalm xxv, 15, old ed. [now erroneously changed to 'mouths.']—Clarendon. Clarendon: In Mid. N. D. III, ii, 238, we have 'mouths.' In fact, in the phrase 'to make mouths,' 'mouths' is a corruption of 'mows,' the original word. See also IV, iv, 50.

353. appurtenance] CLARENDON: Proper accompaniment.

354. comply with] STEEVES: This is again apparently used in the sense of to compliment in V, ii, 178. CALDECOTT: That is, complianitly assume this dress and fashion of behaviour. SINGER: Hamlet has received his old school-fellows with somewhat of the coldness of suspicion hitherto, but he now remembers that this is not courteous. He, therefore, rouses himself to give them a proper reception: 'Come, then, the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony; let me EMBRACE you in this fashion, lest,' &c. That to comply with was to embrace will appear from the following passages in Herrick: '——witty Ovid, by Whom faire Corinna sits; and doth comply With Yvorie wrists, his Laureat Head,' &c.—[Hesperides, p. 279, ed. 1846]; also, 'And then a Rug of carded wooll, Which, .. seem'd to comply, Cloudlike the daintie Deitie.'—[Ib, p. 224.] WHITE: In my judgement 'comply with' (not 'comply alone) has here, and in V, ii, 178, merely the sense of 'compliment.' STAUNTON: Let me fraternise or conjoin with you in the customary mode; not 'Let me compliment.' To comply literally means to enfold. CLARENDON: Use ceremony with you in this fashion. [An interpretation which applies equally well to V, ii, 178.]

354. this garb] CORSON: The reading of the FF makes the better sense, where 'the' is used generically.

355. extent] CALDECOTT: The degree of courtesy dealt out. COLLIER (ed. 2): Is there not room to doubt here whether 'extent' has not been misprinted for extent, a word Sh. not unfrequently uses in the sense of external show? We have no authority for the change, but the word 'extent' is not very intelligible here, though it may be reconciled to a meaning. CLARENDON: Condescension; the behaviour of a superior to an inferior when he makes the first advances. See 'extend' in All'.

handsaw] hand saw Q, Qs.

358. aunt-mother] Daniel (p. 75): Read mother-aunt. Hamlet's mother had become his aunt, just as his uncle had become his father.

360. north-north-west] Francke: Perhaps the meaning is: Great, powerful tempests in the moral world, apparitions from the mysterious Hereafter, can make me mad, can crush my reason; but such people as you are, who come around me with sweet phrases and mock friendship, I have yet wit enough to elude.

361. handsaw] Warburton: Hamner's alteration serves to show us the origin of the proverb which was a common one in Shakespeare's day. Capell (i, 133): The speaker's meaning is that opportunity did not serve for his purpose; when it did, it would be seen he had his right senses. Nares: Hernshaw, hernshaw, or hernshaw is a hero or hern. 'As when a cast of falcons make their flight, At an hernshaw, that flies aloft on wing.'—Spenser, Faerie Queene, VI, vii, 9. 'To know a hawk from a hernshaw, was certainly the original form of the proverb. But the corruption had taken place before the time of Sh. It is handsaw in Ray's Proverbs, p. 196, ed. 1768. White: I suspect that in Shakespeare's time the corrupted phrase had, to general acceptance, lost its original meaning, and that the comparison was supposed to be between the tool called a hawk and a handsaw. There was, and I believe there still is, a hooked cutting tool called a hawk. Halliwell: No evidence in support of the supposition that 'handsaw' is a corruption of hernshaw has been produced; the phrase always occurs in this form. It is not necessary to believe that the supposition is correct, the wildest incongruities being often found in proverbial phrases of this description. It is suggested by C. W. H. in the Athenæum (30 December, 1865), that Sh. might have become acquainted, through North's Plutarth, with the significations attached by the Egyptians to the hawk and heron respectively,—the former was the emblem of the North wind, and the latter of the South wind. 'Hamlet, though feigning madness, yet claims sufficient sanity to distinguish a hawk from a hernshaw when the wind is southerly; that is, in the time of the migration of the latter to the north, when the former is not to be seen.' J. A. G. (N. & Qu. 6 July, 1867) suggests amzer, 'the generic name for our domestic waterfowl.' J. A. Picton (N. & Qu. 30 Nov. 1872) suggests that 'hawk' may refer, not only to the bill-hook, mentioned by White, but also to a plasterer's instrument so named. Clarendon: In Suffolk and Norfolk 'hernshaw' is pronounced 'harnsa,' from which to 'handsaw' is but a single step. For the following explanation of the earlier part of this obscure passage, we are indebted to Mr J. C. Heath, formerly Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge: 'The expression obviously refers to the sport of hawking. Most birds, especially one of heavy flight like the heron, when roused by the falconer or his dog, would fly down or with the wind, in order to escape. When the wind is from the north, the heron flies towards the south, and the spectators may be dazzled by the sun, and be unable to distinguish the hawk from the heron. On the other hand, when the wind is southerly, the heron flies towards the north, and it and the pursuing hawk are clearly seen by the sportsman, who then has his back to the sun, and without difficulty knows the hawk from the heron. A curious reader may further observe that a wind from the precise point north-north-west would be in the eye of the sun at half-past ten in the forenoon, a likely time for hawking, whereas "southerly" includes a wider range of wind for a good view.' [I have heard the emendation suggested of handschuh, the German for glove, but cannot remember that I have ever seen it in print. Heath's explanation sets the question at rest, if 'handsaw' be a corruption of kernsew. Ed.]

373. actor] Tschischwitz: The fun here consists in Hamlet's mentioning an actor before the officious Polonius can utter the word.

375. Buzz] Johnson: Mere idle talk, the buzz of the vulgar. Steevens: Only interjections employed to interrupt Polonius. Jonson uses them often for the same purpose, as well as Middleton in A Mad World, my Masters. Blackstone: It was an interjection used at Oxford, when any one began a story that was generally known before. Douce (ii, 231): This expression may continue to exercise the skill of the critics, if they are disposed to pursue the game through the following mazes: 'Anno DCCCXL Ludovicus imperator ad mortem infrinruit, cujus cibus per XL dies solummodo die dominica dominicum corpus fecit. Cum vidisset daemonem staret, dixit bus, buses, quod significat foras, foras.'—Alberici monachi trium fontium Chronicon, Leips. 1698. Ducange, under the article Busi, says, 'Interpretatur despectus vel contemptus. Papias (Ab Hebraico Bus vel buses, spretit.)'

377. Then...ass] Johnson: This seems to be the line of a ballad. Elze: At all events, it contains biting ridicule of Polonius, who has just said that 'The actors are come hither—upon my honour!'

381. indivisible] Delius: This refers to dramas that carefully observed the Unity of Place; 'poem unlimited' refers to those that disregarded such restrictions. Tschischwitz: In the license granted in 1603 to the Globe Company, permission is given 'freely to use and exercise the Arte and facultie of playing Comedies, Tragedies, Histories, Enterludes, Moralls, Pastoralls, Stage plaiies & such other like.' To this last description, 'stage plaiies,' I suppose the 'poem unlimited' belonged, which, I presume, was an extemporised piece.

381. Seneca...Plautus] Steevens: The tragedies of Seneca were translated into English by Thomas Newton and others, and published first separate, at different times, and afterwards all together in 1581. One comedy of Plautus, viz. the Men-machini, was likewise translated and published in 1595. Prefixed to a map of Cam bridge, in the Second Part of _Braunii Civitates_, &c., is an account of the University, by Gulielmus Soonus, 1575. In this curious memoir we have the following passage: ‘Januarium, Februarium, et Martium menses, ut noctis tardix fallant in spectacula populo exhibenda ponunt tanta elegantia, tanta actionis dignitate, ea vocis et vultus moderatae, ut si Plautus, aut Terentius, aut Seneca revivisceret miramentur suas ipsas fabulas, majoremque quam cum inspectante populo.

Rom. agenzentur, vel aptatem credo caperen. [See III, ii, 93.]

382. _writ...liberty._ CAPELL (i, 133) This means, pieces written in rule, and pieces out of rule. MALONE: ‘Writ’ is used for writing by Shakespeare’s contemporaries. Thus, in _The Apologie of Pierce Penniless_, by Nashe, 1593: ‘For the lowcie circumstance of his poverty before his death, and sending that miserable writte to his wife,’ &c. Again, in Bishop Earle’s _Character of a mere dull Physician_, 1658: ‘Then follows a writ to his druggier in a strange tongue,’ &c. CALDECOTT: ‘For the observance of the rules of the drama, while they take such liberties as are allowable, they are the only men.’ COLLIER: The meaning probably is, that the players were good, whether at written productions or at extemporal plays, where liberty was allowed to the performers to invent the dialogue, in imitation of the Italian _commedia l’ improviso_.

Writ ‘for composition is not English. It is as if we should say, the laws of poem of the laws of poetry, or talk of so and so being contrary to the genius of ode, meaning the genius of lyrical composition. The passages quoted by the Var. commentators are utterly irrelevant. The same erratum occurs, _Jut. Cas._ III, ii, 225: ‘For I haue neyther writ nor words, nor worth.’ CLARENDON: Probably the author did not intend that we should find a distinct meaning in Polonius’s words. CORSON: ‘The Qq and Ff connect in construction, ‘for the law of writ and the liberty,’ with Seneca and Plautus, and not with ‘these are the only men,’ which evidently refers to the actors he’s talking about. ‘Liberty’ should be construed with ‘law,’ the law and the liberty of writ [writing]. And ‘law’ and ‘liberty’ seem to refer, respectively, to ‘heavy’ and ‘light.’ This respective construction is frequent in Sh. See _Macb._ I, iii, 60, 61, _Ham._ III, i, 151; _Wint. Tale._ III, ii, 160–162; _Ant. & Cleo._ III, ii, 15–18; IV, xv, 25, 26; _Com. of Err._ II, ii, 112–117; _Temp._ I, ii, 335, 336; _Mid. N. D._ III, i, 98–101.

384. [Jephthah] STEEVENS communicated to Dr Percy the old song from which Hamlet quotes, and it appeared in the second edition of Percy’s _Reliques_ in 1757. There are two entries of this ballad on the Registers of the Stationers’ Company: in 1567-68, ‘Alexandre laeye’ was licensed to print ‘a ballet intituled the songe of _Jephias_ 15*

Down’ther at his death.’ [Arber’s Transcript, i, 355. ‘His death’ is a clerical error for ‘her death.’ Collier, in vol. xiii, p. 169, Sh. Soc. Publications, seems to doubt if this be the same ballad as that quoted by Hamlet. Ed.] The second entry is ‘Jepsa Judge of Israel,’ p. 93, vol. iii, Dec. 14, 1624. HALLIWELL gives a facsimile of ‘A proper new ballad, intituled, Jepha Judge of Israel,’ of which the first stanza runs as follows:

‘I read that many years agoe,
When Jepha Judge of Israel,
Had one fair Daughter and no more,
whom he loved so passing well.
And as by lot God wot,
It came to passe most like it was,
Great warres there should be,
and who should be the chiefe, but he, but he.’

Copies of this ballad differ slightly from each other, says Halliwell. MALONE refers to Latin tragedies on this subject by Christopherson, 1546, and by Buchanan, 1554, and thinks it had probably been introduced on the English stage. COLLIER shows from Henslowe’s Diary (pp. 220, 221, 222, and 223) that, in 1602, Dekker and Chettle were paid for a tragedy they were writing on the story of Jephthah, and that the subject, therefore, was popularly known by means of ballads and the stage.

399. It came to pass] MOBERLY: 'As he had a daughter, of course he got into a scrape,' is the inference suggested.
400. pious chanson] POPE explained the reading of F, as the name of 'old ballads sung on bridges.' STEEVENS defines 'pious chansons' as ballads containing 'some scriptural history, sung about the streets, and the first row' is the first column of the roughly printed sheet. NARES thinks the reading of the F apparently nonsense. Shakespeare intended, perhaps, to mix French and English, but both seem to have been corrupted by the players and printers. SINGER (ed. 1) really decides the question by an appeal to Q, where the corresponding phrase is 'the first verse of the godly Ballet' [line 1016]. But HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 232) opened the question again by advocating the reading of the F, on the score of its being the latest intention of the poet, and the proper one. 'In fact, in France, the trivial ballad, such as that referred to, is called in ordinary discourse a pons chanson, or a chanson du Pont Neuf. Vaudevilles, ou Chanson du Pont Neuf, les chansons communes se chantent parmi le peuple avec une grande facilité, et sans art: Trivialis cantilena.'—Dictionnaire de Trevoux, s. v. Chanson. In reply to Hunter, KNIGHT [sp. DYCE] pertinently asks: 'A popular ballad is called even in modern dictionaries a chanson du Pont Neuf—but where is the authority for Pons Chanson?' [According to LITTRÉ, the secondary meaning of Pont-Neuf is: 'Chanson populaire sur un air très-connu, e.g. Il sait tous les ponts-neufs qui courent les rues.' (In this sense it is not printed with capital letters.) But nowhere does he give such a phrase as pons chansons nor chanson, used absolutely when meaning the specific chansons du pont-neuf. ED.]

401. my] HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 233): 'My' does not necessarily refer back to the speaker, but may be used ethically.
401. abridgements] JOHNSON: He calls the players afterwards [line 507] the brief chronicles of the time; but I think he now means: those who will shorten my talk. STEEVENS (Note on Mid. N. D. V, i, 39): By abridgement Sh. may mean a dramatic performance, which crowds the events of years into a few hours. DYCE (Gloss.): In this place it is applied to the players, as being, I presume, the persons who represent an abridgement. CLARENDON: Hamlet uses the word in a double sense. The players by entering abridge his talk.

STAUNTON: Compare the advice of Iago to Roderigo;—'Follow thou the wars; deject without the fierceness implied by 'valiant.' CLARENDON: 'Valiant' is probably a mere misprint. WEDGWOOD: Supposed to be from the stuff having been made at Valenciennes

406. ladyship] CLARENDON: In Shakespeare's time, and till after the restoration of Charles II, female parts were played by boys. (Compare Two Gent. IV, iv, 165.) Probably the first woman who ever appeared on the English stage played Desdemona, on Saturday, 6 December, 1660. [Who that actress was has not been ascertained; a Mrs Hughes acted this part, in this company, in 1663, and to her may belong the honour; although the received tradition is that it is due to Mrs Saunderson, afterwards Mrs Betterton. The gross absurdity of entrusting to boys, and even to men, the rôles of women is well hit off in the doggerel 'Prologue, to introduce the first woman that came to act on the stage:'

"Our women are defective, and so sained
You'd think they were some of the guard disguised:
For, to speak truth, men act, that are between Forty and fifty, wenches of fifteen;
With bone so large, and nerve so incompliant,
When you call Desdemona, enter Giant."

The apology was once made to Charles II for unpunctuality in beginning a play, th at 'the queen was not shaved.' See Var. of 1821, vol. iii, p. 129. Ep.]

407. chopine] TRELWALL (Grey's Notes, &c., ii, 291) thinks this is the Scotc word for a quart measure. Vide JAMESON, s. v. Chapin. REED: Tom Coryat, in his Crudities, 1611, p. 262, calls them chapines, and gives the following account of them: 'There is one thing used of the Venetian women, and some others dwelling in the cities and townes subject to the signiory of Venice, that is not to be observed (I thinke) amongst any other women in Christendome: which is common in Venice, that no woman whatsoever goeth without it, either in her house or abroad, a thing made of wood and covered with leather of sundry colors, some with white, some reds, some yellow. It is called a chapiney, which they wear under their shoes. Many of them are curiously painted; some also of them I have seen fairely gilt: so uncomely a thing (in my opinion) that it is pitty this foolish custom is not cleans banished and exterminated out of the citie. There are many of these chapineys of a great height, even half a yard high, which maketh many of their women that are very short, seeme much taller than the tallest women we have in England. Also I have heard it observed among them, that by how much the nobler a woman is, by so much the higher are her chapineys. All their gentlewomen and most of their wives and widowes that are of any wealth, are assisted and supported euyther by men or women, when they walke abroad, to the end they may not fall. They are borne up most commonly by the left arme, otherwise they might quickly take a fall. MALONE: Minshew defines 'Chapin de muger, a womans shoes, such as they use in Spaine, mules, or high corks shoes.' There is no synonymous word in the Italian. BOSWELL said that chippine is in Veneroni's Dictionary, but Dyce (Gloss.) says that none of the Italian Dictionaries in his possession contain the word. [It is not in Baretti. SINGER says that it is recorded under the title of soccolo, which, however, means simply a sandal, or patten.] DOUCE: In Raymond's Voyage through Italy, 1648, we find: 'This place [Venice] is much frequented by the walking may poles, I meane the women. They weare their coats halfe too long for their bodies, being mounted on their chippens, (which are as high as a man's leg), they walke between two handmaids, majestickly deliberating of every step they take. This fashion was invented and appropriated to the noble Venitian wives, to bee constant to distinguish them from the courtesans, who goe covered in a vaile of white taffety.' The chopine, or some kind of high shoe, was occasionally used in England. Bulwer, in his Artificial Changeling [1653], complains of this fashion as a monstruous affectation, and says that his countrywomen therein imitated the Venetian and Persian ladies. In Sandys's travels, 1615, there is a figure of a Turkish lady with chopines; it is not improbable that the Venetians borrowed them from the Greek Islands. SINGER: Perhaps Hamlet may have some allusion to the boy having grown so as to fill the place of a tragedy heroine, and so assumed the coturnus; which Puttenham described as 'high corked shoes, or pantoffes, which now they call in Spaine and Italy Shoppini.' [Singer misunderstood the passage in Puttenham (see Arber's Rep. p. 49), which is as follows: 'the actors [of the parts of great Princes] ware vpon their legges buskins of leather called Coturni, and other solemne habits, and for a speciall preheminence did walke vpon those high corked shoes or pantoffes, which,' &c. At a Jewish wedding in Jerusalem at which I was present, in 1856, the young bride, aged twelve, wore chopines at least ten inches high. Ed.]

409. ring] JOHNSON: Cracked too much for use. DOUCE: There was a ring on the coin, within which the sovereign's head was placed; if the crack extended from the edge beyond this ring, the coin was rendered unfit for currency. [To the same effect, also, GIFFORD, note on Jonson's The Magnetic Lady, Works, vol. vi, p. 76.] Such pieces were hoarded by the usurers of the time and lent out as lawful money. Thus, Roger Fenton, in his Treatise of Usury, 1611, p. 23: A poore man desireth a

This is usurie.' And again, 'It is a common custome of his [the usurer's] to buy up crackt angels at nine shillings the piece. Now sir, if a gentleman (on good assurance) request him of mony, Good sir, (saith hee, with a counterfeit sigh) I would be glad to please your worship, but my good mony is abroad, and that I have, I dare not put in your hands. The gentleman thinking this conscience, where it is subtily, and being beside that in some necessity, ventures on the crackt angels, some of which cannot file, for soldering, and pays double interest to the miser under the cloake of honesty.'—Lodge's Wit's Miserie, 1596. CALDECOTT: Another sense is also meant: a voice broken in consequence of licentious indulgence.

410. French] CAPELL (i, 133): The French are remarkably irregular in all feats of sporting even at this day. STEEVENS: Tolet mentions that Sir Thomas Browne (Miscellany Tracts, p. 116) says that 'the French seem to have been the first and noblest falconers in the western part of Europe,' and afterwards (p. 118), adds CLARENDON, he (Sir Thomas Browne) mentions a falcon of Henry of Navarre, 'which Scaliger saith, he saw strike down a buzzard, two wild geese, divers kites, a crane and a swan.' 'The phrase here, "fly at any thing we see," may not, therefore, have been intended to express contempt.'

414. me] An ethical dative, like 'inquire me first what Danskers,' &c., II, i, 6; also compare Rom. & Jul. III, i, 6: 'he claps me his sword.' SCHMIDT (Lex. s. v. 'I') says of this dative, that although superfluous as to the general sense, it imparts a lively color to the expression. MÄTZNER (ii, 211), with keen analysis, defines it as a personal pronoun of the first or second person, used, in familiar or joosce style, to denote the subjective interest which the speaker or the person addressed feels in some allusion to a circumstance which objectively is regarded as accomplished independently of that interest. See also V, i, 157.

Russia they have 'divers kinds of fish: the Bellouga and Bellougina, ... the Osi-trina and Sturgeon. ... Of the roes of these four kinds they make very great store of Icary or Caviary.' Ritson (Remarks, &c., p. 199): Hamlet means that the play, like the pickled sturgeon, was a delicacy for which the multitude has no relish. Douce (Illustr. &c., ii, 236): This word has been frequently mispronounced career on the stage; but the following line from Sir J. Harrington's 33d Epigram, book iii, leaves no uncertainty in the matter: 'And cæ'tare, but it little boots....' Caviar was formerly a considerable article of commerce between England and Russia. Nares: In Shakespeare's time it was a new and fashionable delicacy, not obtained nor relished by the vulgar, and therefore used by him to signify anything above their comprehension.

416. the general] Malone: Lord Clarendon (Book v, p. 530) uses this word to signify 'the people' in the same manner it is used here. Caldecott: In Galates of Manners, p. 29, 1576, we have the most used in the same sense.

418. cried in the top] Warburton: That is, whose judgement I had the highest opinion of. Johnson: I think it means only, that were higher than mine. Heath: Whose judgement, in such matters, was in much higher vogue than mine. Steevens: Perhaps it means only: whose judgement was more clamorously delivered than mine. We still say of a bawling actor, that he speaks on the top of his voice. Henley: To over-top is a hunting term applied to a dog when he gives more tongue than the rest of the cry. To this, I believe, Hamlet refers, and he afterwards mentions a cry of players. Caldecott: Proclaimed not merely in addition to my voice and censure, but with a tone of authority that mine could not sound. Clarendon: Henley's explanation of the metaphor is probably right. But it is the superior authority or value of the judgements, not the greater loudness with which they were delivered, that is indicated here.

419 modesty] Warburton: Simplicity. Dyce (Glos.): Moderation. Tschisch-witz: In rhetorical phraseology, 'modesty' is εὐραία. Cic. De Off. lib. I, x1, 142, ed. Orelli: 'Sed ills est εὐραία, in qua intelligitur ordinis conservatio. Itaque, eandem nos modestiam spellemus, sed definitur a Stoicis, ut modestia sit scientia rerum rerum qua agerentur aut dicentur, loco suo colocandarum.' Thus, also, 'modesty of nature' [III, ii, 18] means that symmetrical harmony by which the acts of everyday life are made to fit the situation, that 'temperance and smoothness in the very torrent, tempest, and the whirlwind of passion' to which 'modesty' can be applied, as in Pliny, vi, 20, 71: modestia quaedam aquarum. Did Sk. really not understand Latin?

420. sallats] Heath: This is spoken in approbation, not in disparagement, of the play. The sense is: it wanted the high seasoning of loose ribaldry and luscious the lines to make the matter savoury, nor no matter in the 421 phrase that might indict the author of affection; but called it an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved; 'twas Æneas's tale to Dido; and thereabout of it es-double meanings. Gifford defends Pope's reading, on the strength of a line in one of Jonson's Epigrams (Works, vol. viii, p. 177): 'I have no salt, no bawdry he doth mean;' and pronounces 'sallets' as akin to nonsense. Singer: 'Salt' was probably intended. 'Salt, a pleasant and merrie word, that maketh folks to laugh, and sometimes pricke.'—Barret. Dyce: In spite of Gifford's note, I think the alteration to salt a hasty one—sallets, i.e. salt (ribald) words and allusions (see Richardson's Dictionary for the etymology of salat or sallet). Collier (ed. 2): The (MS) has 'salt,' perhaps wrongly, though sallets or salads seems not easily understood. The allusion may have been particular and temporary. Clarendon: Pope was probably not aware that fragrant and piquant herbs were mixed with the salad.

422. indirect...affection] Steevens: That is, convict the author of being a fantastical, affected writer. In Love's Lab. V, i, 4, 'witty without affection, i.e. affection. Malvolio is called 'an affectioned ass' in Twelfth Night, II, iii, 160. Caldecott: From the use of the Latin, it seems that the English word was first introduced. 'Thy maner of wrytynge is dark with over moche curysyte. Stylus tuus affectione obscuratur nimia.'—Hornman's Vulgaria, 1530.

424. handsome than fine] Delius: 'Handsome' denotes genuine, natural beauty—fine, artistic, labored beauty. Clarke: In this passage [from line 420] Sh. is, in his own subtle vein of quiet hum &, satirising the folly of give-and-take criticism.

425. Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 72): I should suspect this play referred to by Hamlet to be Shakespeare's from one reason only; and that is, from its subject. There is scarce a play throughout all his works, in which it was possible to introduce the mention of them, where he has not by simile, allusion, or otherwise, hinted at the Trojan affairs; so fond was he of that story. Pope (ed. 2): This whole speech of Hamlet is purely ironical; he seems to commend this play to expose the bombast of it. Who was its author is not come to my knowledge. Warburton: I think that Hamlet spoke with commendation to upbraid the false taste of the audience of that time, which would not suffer them to do justice to the simplicity and the sublime of this production. And I reason, first, from the character Hamlet gives of the play from whence the passage is taken. Secondly, from the passage itself. And, thirdly, from the effect it had on the audience. First, they who suppose the passage was given in order to be ridiculed must needs suppose that what Hamlet says in lines 418-426 was purely ironical, and the strangest irony ever was written. ‘It pleased not the multitude.’ This we must conclude to be true, however ironical the rest be. Now the reason given of the designed ridicule is the supposed bombast. Whereas bombast, we know, at that time took with the multitude. But Hamlet tells why it displeased them: that there was no salt in the lines, nor affected style. Now it could not be, if this play displeased on account of the bombast, that they whom it displeased should give this reason for their dislike. All these inconsistencies disappear if we take Hamlet as speaking his genuine sentiments, as thus: The play, I remember, pleased not the multitude, and the reason was its being written on the rules of the ancient drama; to which they were entire strangers. But in my opinion and in that of others of better judgement than mine, it was an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, i.e. where the three unities were well preserved. Set down with as much modesty as cunning, i.e. where not only the art of composition, but the simplicity of nature, was carefully attended to. But these qualities, which gained my esteem, lost the public’s. For I remember, one said, There was no salt in the diners to make the matter savory, i.e. there was not, according to the mode of that time, a fool or clown, to joke, quibble, and talk freely. Nor no matter in the phrase that might inude the author of affection, i.e. nor none of those passionate, pathetic love-scenes, so essential to modern tragedy. But he called it an honest method, i.e. he owned, however tasteless this method of writing, on the ancient plan, was to our times, yet it was chaste and pure; the distinguishing character of the Greek drama. I need only make one observation on all this; that, thus interpreted, it is the justest picture of a good tragedy, wrote on the ancient rules. 2. A second proof that this speech was given to be admired is from the intrinsic merit of the speech itself, which contains the description of a circumstance very happily imagined, namely: Illum and Priam’s falling together, with the effect it had on the destroyer. Now this circumstance, illustrated with the fine similitude of the storm, is so highly worked up as to have well deserved a place in Virgil’s second book of the Aeneid, even though the work had been carried on to that perfection which the Roman poet had conceived. 3. The third proof is, from the effects which followed on the recital. Hamlet, his best character, approves it; the player is deeply affected in repeating it; and only the foolish Polonius tiring with it. The player changes color, and the tears start from his eyes. But our author was too good a judge of nature to make bombast and unnatural sentiment produce such an effect. But if any one will still say that Sh. intended to represent a player unnaturally and fantastically affected, we must appeal to Hamlet, that is, to Sh. himself in this matter; who, on the reflection he makes upon the player’s emotion, in order to excite his own revenge, gives not the least hint that the player was unnaturally or injudiciously moved. On the contrary, his fine description of the actor’s emotion shows he thought just otherwise. And indeed had Hamlet esteemed this emotion anything unnatural, it had been a very improper circumstance to spur him to his purpose. That which supports the common opinion concerning this passage is the turgid expression in some parts of it, which, they think, could never be given by the poet to be commended. We shall, therefore, in the next place examine the lines most obnoxious to censure, and see how much, allowing the charge, this will make for the induction of their conclusion. [See lines 451 and 473.] Now whether these be bombast or not is not the question; but whether Sh. esteemed them so. That he did not so esteem them appears from his having used the very same thoughts in the same expressions in his best plays, and given them to his principal characters, where he aims at the sublime; as in the following passages: Troilus (Tro. & Cres. V, iii. 40-42) far outstrips the execution of Pyrrhus’s sword in the character he gives of Hector’s. Cleopatra (Ant. & Cleo. IV, xv, 44) rails at fortune in the same manner. But another use may be made of these quotations; a discovery of this recited play, which, letting us into a circumstance of our author’s life (as a writer) hitherto unknown, was the reason I have been so large upon this question. I think, then, it appears from what has been said that the play in dispute was Shakespeare’s own, and that this was the occasion of writing it. He was desirous, as soon as he had found his strength, of restoring the chasteness and regularity of the ancient stage, and therefore composed this tragedy on the model of the Greek drama, as may be seen by throwing so much action into relation. But his attempt proved fruitless, and the raw, unnatural taste, then prevalent, forced him back again into his old Gothic manner. For which he took this revenge upon his audience. Capell: Among the very few plays of that time that have not been seen by the editor is one that bears the title, ‘Dido, queen of Carthage,’ in which one might be apt to expect the speech in question; the cast of Thomas Nash’s production is widely different. Malone: I formerly thought that these lines were extracted from some old play, of which it appeared to me probable that Marlowe was the author; but whatever Shakespeare’s view in producing them may have been, I am now decidedly of opinion they were written by himself, not in any former unsuccessful piece, but expressly for the play of Hamlet. It is observable that what Warburton calls ‘the fine similitude of the storm,’ is likewise found in our poet’s Venus & Adonis. Steevens: The praise which Hamlet bestows on this piece is certainly assembled, and agrees very well with the character of madness, which, before witnesses, he thought it necessary to support. The speeches before us have so little merit that nothing but an affection of singularity could have influenced Warburton to undertake their defence. The poet, perhaps, meant to exhibit a just resemblance of some of the plays of his own age, in which the faults were too general and too glaring to permit a few splendid passages to alone for them. The player knew his trade, and spoke the lines in an affecting manner, because Hamlet had declared them to be pathetic, or might be in reality a little moved by them. The mind of the prince, it must be confessed, was fitted for the reception of gloomy ideas, and his tears were ready at a slight solicitation. It is by no means proved that Sh. has employed the same thoughts clothed in the same expressions in his best plays. If he bides had the false huswifse Fortune break her wheel, he does not desire her to break all its spokes; nay, even its periphery, and make use of the more afterwards for such an immeasurable cast. Though if what Warburton has said should be found in any instance to be exactly true, what can we infer from thence but that Sh. was sometimes wrong in spite of conviction, and in the hurry of writing committed those very faults which his judgement could detect in others? Warburton is inconsistent in his assertions concerning the literature of Sh. In a note on Tro. & Cres. he affirms that Shakespeare’s want of learning kept him from being acquainted with Homer; and yet in this instance would suppose him capable of producing a complete tragedy written on the ancient rules; and that the speech before us had sufficient merit to entitle it to a place in the second book of Virgil's Æneid. Steevens afterwards discovered a copy of this play of Dido, queen of Carthage, referred to by Capell, and asserted that it did not furnish Sh. with more than a general hint for his description of the death of Priam, &c., unless a correspondence be perceived to Shakespeare's line 451 in 'And with the wind thereof the king fell down,' and to line 458 in 'So leaning on his sword he stood stone still.' The extracts which Steevens gives will be found in Fleay's note, further on; of them Steevens says that surely the greater part is more ridiculous than even Shakespeare's happiest vein of burlesque and parody could have made it. Ritson believes that the admiration of the play expressed by Hamlet was genuine, and that this is probably an extract from one of Shakespeare's early productions. He then adds: The verses recited are far superior to those of any coeval writer; the parallel passage in Marlowe and Nash's Dido will not bear the comparison. Possibly, indeed, it might have been his first attempt, before the divinity that lodg'd within him had instructed him to despise the timid and unnatural style so much and so unjustly admired in his predecessors or contemporaries, and which he afterwards so happily ridiculed in 'the swaggering vain of Ancient Pistol.' Seymour (ii, 172) agrees with Ritson, and Pye (p. 314) agrees with Seymour. Coleridge: This admirable substitution of the epic for the dramatic diction of Shakespeare's own dialogue, and authorized too, by the actual style of the tragedies before his time (Porrex & Ferrex, Tt. And., &c.), is well worthy of notice. The fancy that a burlesque was intended sinks below criticism; the lines, as epic narrative, are superb. In the thoughts, and even in the separate parts of the diction, this description is highly poetical; in truth, taken by itself, that is its fault that it is too poetical!—the language of lyric vehemence and epic pomp, and not of the drama. But if Sh. had made the diction truly dramatic, where would have been the contrast between Hamlet and the play in Hamlet? Schlegel (Lect. on Dram. Lit. ii, 197): This extract must not be judged of by itself, but in connection with the place where it is introduced. To distinguish it as dramatic poetry in the play itself, it was necessary that it should rise above its dignified poetry in the same proportion that the theatrical elevation does above simple nature. Hence Sh. has composed the play in Hamlet altogether in sententious rhymes full of antitheses. But this solemn and measured tone did not suit a speech in which violent emotion ought to prevail, and the poet had no other expeditious way of express: that the speech of the pathos. The language of the speech in question is falsely emphatical; but yet this fault is so mixed up with true grandeur that a player, practised in calling forth in himself artificially the imitated emotions, may certainly be carried away with it. Besides, it will hardly be believed that Sh. knew so little of his art as not to be aware that a tragedy in which Æneas had to make a lengthened epic relation of a transaction that happened so long before as the destruction of Troy could neither be dramatic nor theatrical. Caldecott: These warm commendations of Hamlet cannot be other than the real sentiment of Sh. From whatever quarter the fragment came, it affords a decisive proof of Shakespeare's taste in this department of the drama. He may here have chosen to give his conception of the true and just swell of tragedy. Hunter (ii, 234): Is it possible that Sh., who knew so well what belongs to poetry and the dramatic art, can have approved of a wearisome speech like this, its bombast phrases, [425. Æneas's tale to Dido.]
Its empty declamation, and with at least two anti-climaxes as palpable as can anywhere be found? There is but one redeeming clause [lines 461-465]. But even this, as the reader cannot but perceive, sinks as it proceeds, and becomes commonplace and inharmonious. His objection to the phrase, 'mobled queen,' might of itself prove that the poet, if he seemed in anything which he said to commend, spoke ironically, for a more unhappy expression could scarcely have occurred. Probably it was the play of Dido that he meant to ridicule. Strachey (p. 55), speaking of the extracts from Dido, Queen of Carthage, given by Steevens, says: 'Though there is not a line, hardly a thought of them, the same as the passage which the player recites, and which is of course Shakespeare's own, still the style is so like, that the audience would probably have been reminded of Marlowe's play, and so have experienced the sensation of hearing real men quoting a real play; nay, if they retained only a general recollection of the original, might have supposed that the quotation was actually from Marlowe's tragedy.' Elze: From all that we know of Shakespeare's treatment of his own works, it seems in the highest degree improbable, not only that he should have introduced here his own composition, but that he should have praised it also. Rightly to understand this passage, it is essential that we should lose sight of the person of the poet, and separate his opinion from the praise of Hamlet. It is clear that in this speech the keynote of that school of learned poets is struck that was hostile to Shakespeare's naturalistic style. . . . By making Hamlet so enthusiastic in his admiration of a drama that was moulded on the learned, pathetic, and classic model, Sh. evidently wished to give us an insight into his hero's studious and pre-eminently ideal character. A side-thrust is at the same time unmistakably given to Shakespeare's opponents; in effect he thus appeals to them: 'Behold, it is such folk as my Hamlet that admire you; such folk is it that you educate with your poetry.' Delius: This drama, if there really were such a one, and if it had not been composed for the nonce to suit Hamlet's purpose, could have been written by no one but Sh. himself, and the praise of 'modesty' and 'cunning' must have been meant in seriousness. Fleay (On the Extract from an Old Play in Hamlet. Macmillan's Maga. Dec. 1874, p. 135): Marlowe's play was finished by Nash, after Marlowe's death in 1593, and published in 1594. It is for the most part written in Marlowe's style, with some minor interpolations by Nash. In Act II, sc. i, which is far the weakest in the play, and does least to advance the plot, there are several peculiarities. 1. Priamus is used for the name of the king of Troy eight times, Priam three times only. Elsewhere in the play the form of Priam is used exclusively. 2. The name Alexander is given to Helen's lover; in other parts of this play, and in Marlowe's other works, he is called Paris. 3. At the end of Æneas's tale there is a stage-direction [Exeunt omnes], although Ascanius remains on the stage and talks to Venus and Cupid, who then come in. This double ending to a scene implies double authorship, or one author working at two distinct times. It is a common phenomenon; in Sh., for instance, we find it in Tro. & Cress. and in Macb. 4. The whole of the scene is inferior in workmanship, in characterization, in theatrical requirements, in poetical power. All the Æneas's tale' part could be cut out and not missed. This scene, then, for the above reasons, is unlike Marlowe's work in the rest of the play; it is equally unlike the other plays of his writing. We may confidently assign the greater part of it to Nash, if not the whole. But it was in 1594 that Sh. revised the Hen. V, in which Marlowe had written a great part, and he might naturally expect to have the revision of this play also committed to him. He was on indifferent terms with Nash at this time. What could be more likely than that he should write a scene, or a portion of one, to show how much better he would have done the editing of the play? He chooses, naturally enough, that scene in which Nash has shown the greatest weakness, and writes nearly in the Marlowe rhythm as he can. . . . [Page 136.] I hold, then, that the object which Sh. had in view in introducing this speech into Hamlet was to expose the weakness of his opponent Nash as a playwright, and to utilize a piece of work which he had lying idle by him. When he wrote Hamlet he seems to have been just entering that cynical state which has been noted by Hallam as a characteristic of his third period. . . . In considering this point it must not be forgotten that this speech is contained in the earliest form of the published Hamlet, so that it was an integral part of the play in its first state. This is important so far that when the revised Hamlet was produced, Nash was certainly no longer alive, and Sh. was not the man to exult over a dead enemy. . . . [Page 137.] We will now compare some parts of the tale of Aeneas as told by Sh. and by Nash, with a view to show that they are rival productions. Nash describes Pyrrhus thus:

'At last came Pyrrhus, fell, and full of ire,
  His harness dropping blood, and on his spear
  The mangled head of Priam's youngest son.
And after him his band of myrmidons
  With balls of wildfire in their murderous paws,
  Which made the funeral flame which burnt fair Troy.'

Shakespeare's is more expanded. Compare lines 430-442. Nash gives this narrative of Priam's death:

'And at Jove's altar finding Priamus,
  About whose withered neck hung Hecuba
  Folding his hand in hers, and jointl"y both Beating their breasts and falling on the ground;
  He with his falchion's point raised up at once,
  And with Megara's eyes stared in their face,
  Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance.

  Not moved at all, but smiling at his tears,
  The butcher while his hands were yet held up
  Treading upon his breast, struck off his hands.
  At which the frantic queen leapt on his face,
  And in his eyelids hanging by the nails
  A little while prolonged her husband's life.
  At last the soldiers pulled her by the heels.
  And swung her howling in the empty air,
  Which sent an echo to the wounded king,
  Whereat he lifted up his bed-ridden limbs
  And would have grappled with Achilles' son,
  Forgetting both his strength and want of hands;
  Which he disdain'd whilst his sword about,
  And with the wind thereof the king fell down;
  Then from the navel to the throat at once
  He ripped old Priam.'

Compare Sh., lines 446-452. That these passages were written in direct rivalry is manifest; the superior power and excellence of the Sh. portions is equally manifest; and when we remember that the splendid simile of the storm and the description of Hecuba are also in the Sh. speech, it is impossible to imagine that he meant these lines for mere bombast. I do not quote the Hecuba part, as there is nothing corresponding to it in Nash, and it is in every one’s hands. The finest bit in Nash is the picture of Pyrrhus:

‘So leaning on his sword he stood stone still,
Viewing the fire wherewith rich Ilion burn’d;’

and this Sh. has capsed with lines 458-466. There is a moral certainty that these passages are competitors for popular favor. . . . On all grounds alike, then, I hold that this scene was written by Sh. in 1594, as a supplement to Marlowe’s unfinished play, in competition with Nash, and that it was introduced by him into the first draught of Hamlet in 1601 or thereabouts.

435. gules] STEEVENS: This signifies red in the barbarous jargon of heraldry. Also in Timon, IV, iii, 59. WEDGWOOD: From the red color of the mouth. Geule, the mouth, throat, gullet. GLOSSARY of Terms Used in British Heraldry: Perhaps from the Persian ghal, a rose; if so, it was probably introduced by the Crusaders.

435. trick’d] MALONE: That is, ‘painted, smeared.’ CLARENDON: In heraldry a ‘trick’ is a description in drawing, opposed to ‘blazon,’ a description in words. DELLIUS: ‘Trick’d,’ like the following participles, ‘baked’ and ‘impasted,’ belongs to ‘gules,’ not to ‘he.’

Which was declining on the milky head
Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick;
So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood,
And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing.

But as we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless and the orb below
As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region; so after Pyrrhus' pause
Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work;
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forged for proof eterne,

456. declining] CALDECOTT: This use of the word, which is frequent in Sh... I have not observed in any contemporary. See also I, v, 50. [Elsewhere Caldecott adduces this as an argument in favor of the belief that this extract is Shakespeare's own composition. See his note on line 437.]

458. painted] MALONE: Sh. was probably here thinking of the tremendous personages often represented in old tapestry, whose uplifted swords stick in the air, and do nothing. DELIUS: The simile is amplified in Macb. V, viii, 25-27.

459. neutral] CLARENDON: Not standing 'between his will and matter.' But indifferent to both. So 'neutral' is opposed to 'loyal,' in Macb. II, ii, 106.

460. For single lines of two or three accents interspersed amid ordinary verses, see ABBOTT (§§ 511, 512); so, too, II, ii, 540, 557, 563; III, iii, 78; and Macb. I, ii, 20.

462. rack] DYE (Glos.): A mass of vapoury clouds. So Bacon's Sylva Sylvarum, § 115, p. 32, ed. 1658. 'The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above (which we call the rack).'

464. hush] For other instances of the conversion of one part of speech into another, see ABBOTT, § 22.

465. region] CLARENDON: Originally a division of the sky marked out by the Roman augurs. In later times the atmosphere was divided into three regions, upper, middle, and lower. By Sh. the word is used to denote the air generally.

'With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword

471. DRYDEN (Preface to Troilus and Cressida, 1679): What a pudder is here kept in raising the expression of trifling thoughts. Would not a man have thought that the Poet had been bound Prentice to a Wheel-wright for his first Rant? and had followed a Rageman, for the clout and blanket, in the second? Fortune is painted on a wheel; and therefore the writer in a rage, will have Poetical Justice done upon every member of that Engin; after this execution be bowls the Nave downhill, from Heaven to the Fiends: (an unreasonable long mark a man would think;) 'tis well there are no solid Orbs to stop it in the way, or no Element of fire to consume it; but when it came to the earth, it must be monstrous heavy, to break ground as low as to the Center. His making milch the burning eyes of Heaven was a pretty tolerable flight too; and I think no man ever drew milk out of eyes before him: yet to make the wonder greater, these eyes were burning. Such a sight indeed were enough to have rais'd passion in the Gods, but to excuse the effects of it, he tells you perhaps they did not see it. [This passage is criticised not as Shakespeare's, but as 'written by some other poet.' Ed.]

473. fellies] CLARENDON: 'lantes: The fellowes of a wheele; the peces (of wood) whereof the ring, or the rime consists.'—Cotgrave.

478. jig] STEEVENS: A jig was not, in Shakespeare's time, only a dance, but a ludicrous dialogue in metre, and of the lowest kind, like Hamlet's conversation with Ophelia [III, ii, 105-115]. In The Hog hath lost his Pearl, 1614, one of the players comes to solicit a gentleman to write a jig for him. Many of these jigs are entered in the Stationers' Company:—'Philips his Jigg of the Slyppers,' 1595; 'Kemp's Jigg of the Kitchen-stuff Woman,' 1595. MALONE: So, also, in the Prologue to Fletcher's Love's Pilgrimage [misquoted; it should be the Fair Maid of the Inn—Collier's Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, iii, 380]: 'A Jig shall be clapp'd at, and every rhyme Prain'd and applauded,' &c. A jig was not always in the form of a dialogue; it signified a ludicrous metrical composition, as well as a dance. So in Florio: 'Frottola, a country gigge, or round, or countrie song, or wanton verse.' COLIER (Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, iii, 380): We have no extant specimen of any such performance. It seems to have been a ludicrous composition in rhyme, sung, or said, by the clown, and accompanied by dancing and playing upon the pipe and tabor. Singer: Giga, in Italian, was a fiddle or crowd. Hence jig (first written gigge, though pronounced with g soft, after the Italian) was a ballad or ditty sung to a fiddle. Dryce (Note on Prologue to Fair Maid of the Inn): More persons than one were sometimes employed in a jig; and there is reason to believe that the performance was of considerable length, lasting even, on some occasions, for an hour. Clarendon: See Colegrave, ‘Farce: f. A (fond and dissolute) Play, Comedy, or Enterlude; also, the Iyg at the end of an Enterlude, wherein some pretie knaerue is acte’d.’ [See Chappell (Popular Music of the Olden Time, p. 495), where the tune is given of The King’s Jig, which is supposed to have been one of the tunes to which Charles II danced. Collier says that some of Tarleton’s jigs, both music and words, survive in MS.]

480. mobled WARBURTON: That is veiled. Sandys [Travels, i, 69, ed. 1637—Clarendon], speaking of the ‘Turkish women, says: ‘their heads and faces are so mobled in fine linen that nothing is to be seen of them but their eyes.’ Upton (p. 299): This designedly affected expression seems to be formed from Virg. Æn. ii, 40: Magna comitante cateria, i.e. mob-led Queen. Farmer: ‘The moon does mobble up herself.’—Shirley’s Gentleman of Venice. Holt White: It is nothing but a deprivation of muffled. ‘Mobled nine days in my considering cap.’—Ogilby’s Fables. Malone: A few lines lower we are told that she had ‘a clout’ upon her head. To mob (in the North pronounced mob), says Ray, in his Dict. of North Country Words, is ‘to dress carelessly. Mabs are slatterns.’ Coleridge: A mob-cap is still a word in common use for a morning-cap, which conceals the whole head of hair, and passes under the chin. It is nearly the same as the night-cap, that is, it is an imitation of it, so as to answer the purpose (‘I am not drest for company’), and yet reconciling it with neatness and perfect purity. Delius: The real meaning which Sh. attached to it here is still doubtful; that an unusual word was intended is plain, both from Hamlet’s objection to it and Polonius’s approval of it. G. H. 0r S. (N. & Q. 23 July, 1864) suggests maddled, a word in use in Yorkshire, meaning not absolutely mad, but bewildered almost to madness.

482. good WARBURTON: Sh. has judiciously chosen Polonius to represent the false taste of that audience which has condemned the play here reciting. When the actor comes to the finest and most pathetic part of the speech, Polonius cries out, ‘This is too long.’ And yet this man of modern taste, who stood all this time perfectly unmoved with the forcible imagery of the relator, no sooner fears, amongst many good things, one quaint and fantastical word, put in, I suppose, purposely for this end, than he professes his approbation of the propriety and dignity of it. MOBERLY: Polonius praises the epithet to make up for his blunder in objecting to the length.

484. bisson] WEDGWOOD: Blind, properly near-sighted. Dutch, 'bij siem proprius videre,'—Kilian. CLARENDON: In Cor. II, i, 70, it means 'blind.' Here it is rather, 'blinding.' 'Beessen' is given by Brodgen, in Provincial Words, as still current in Lincolnshire. [See also notes on its derivation by F. J. V. and JOHN ADDIS, in N. & Q. 15 March, 1873; and 19 April, 1873. Ed.]

495. milch] STEEVENS: Drayton has 'exhaling the milch dew.'—Polyolbion, xii, 171. DOUCE: 'Milche-hearted,' in Hulet's Abecedarium, 1552, is rendered lemosus; and in Bibliotheca Eliota, 1545, we find 'lemosi, they were lyghlyt.' STAWTON: Moist.
496. passion] SINGER: Would have moved them to sympathy or compassion.
ELIZ: According to Mommsen (Perkins-Sh. p. 367), passionate had even in Shakespeare's days an antiquated sound, and for this reason it would appear more appropriate here.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodykins, man, much better! Use every man after his desert, and who should 'scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity; the less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

519. mock] CLARKE: Hamlet, like the true gentleman that he is, feels that he has been betrayed into treating the old courtier with something of impatience and discourtesy; therefore he bids the actor, whom he knows to be naturally and professionally disposed to waggery, not forget himself to Polonius on the strength of the example just given.

522. alone] CLARKE: The eagerness shown by Hamlet to be left in peace by himself appears to be a main evidence of his merely acting a part and assuming madness; he longs to get rid of the presence of persons before whom he has resolved to wear a show of insanity. Alone, he is collected, coherent, full of introspection. That he is neither dispassionate nor cool appears to be the result of his unhappy source of thought, not the result of derangement; he is morally afflicted, not mentally affected.

523. peasant slave] It is shown by FURNIVALL in N. & Qm. 12 April and 3
Hamlet

Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit
That from her working all his visage wann’d;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in’s aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suitting
With forms to his conceit? And all for nothing!

For Hecuba?

What’s Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears.

May, 1873, that it was possible for Sh. to have seen in the flesh some of the bondmen or ‘peasant slaves’ of England.

527. wann’d] Steevens upheld warm’d, because the effort to shed tears and the unusual exertion in a passionate speech would warm and flush the face; no actor can grow pale at will, and even if he could there is nothing in the fragment to make him. Malone effectually silenced all this by referring to Polonio’s speech, line 497. Clarendon: We have had an instance of a verb formed from an adjective in ‘pale,’ I, v, 90, where it is transitive.

530. conceit] Clarendon: Conception, idea (of the character he was personating). [See also III, iv, 114; IV, v, 43.]

534. cue] Wedgwood: The last words of the preceding speech, prefixed to the speech of an actor in order to let him know when he is to come on the stage. From the letter Q, by which it was marked. ‘Q, a note of entrance for actors, because it is the first letter of quando, when, showing when to enter and speak.’—C. Butler, Eng. Gram., 1634, in N. & Q. 5 Aug. 1865. Minshew explains it somewhat differently: ‘A qu, a term used among stage-players, & Lat. qualis, i.e. at what manner of word the actors are to begin to speak, one after another hath done his speech. The French term is replique.'

537. free] CALDECOTT: Free from offence, guiltless. [See 'free souls,' III, ii, 231.]
540. peak] SINGER: To mope, to act foolishly and with irresolution.
541. John-a-dreams] STEVENS: That is, John of dreams, which means only John the dreamer: a nickname for any ignorant, silly fellow. Thus the puppet thrown at during Lent was called Jack-a-lent, and the ignis-fatua, Jack-a-lanthorn.
John-a-dromes, however, if not a corruption of this nickname, seems to have been some well-known character, as I have met with more than one allusion to him.
So, in Have with you to Saffron Walden, by Nash, 1596: 'The description of that poor John-a-dromes his man, whom he had hired,' &c. John-a-Dromes is likewise a foolish character in Whetstone's Promes and Cassandra, 1578.
COLLIER: It is rather a nickname for a sleepy, apathetic fellow. The only mention yet met with of John-a-dreams is in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, 1608 (see Shak. Soc. vol. x, p. 49):
'His name is John, indeede, saies the cinnick; but neither John a nads, nor John a dreames, yet either as you take it.' John-a-dromes was, in all probability, a different person.
542. un pregnant] JOHNSON: Not quickened with a new desire of vengeance; not teeming with revenge. CLARENDON: Having no living thoughts within relating to my cause. In Meas. for Meas. I, i, 12, 'pregnant in' is used for 'filled with knowledge of.'
544. property] CLARENDON: This appears here to be used in the sense of 'own person.' Compare 'proper life,' in V, ii, 60. Or possibly it may mean his 'kingly right.' The commentators, by their silence, seem to take it in the ordinary modern sense, which can hardly be. [I suppose it refers to his crown, his wife, everything, in short, which he might be said to be possessed of, except his life. 'Property' is used in its ordinary modern sense in Merry Wives, III, iv, 10. Ed.]
545. defeat] WARBURTON: Destruction. STEVENS: This word is very licen-

Diss. used by the old writers. Thus, in Middleton's Anything for a Quiet Life:
'I have heard of your defeat made upon a mercer.' Chapman's Revenge for Honour:
'he might meantime make a sure defeat On our good aged father's life.'
Isle of Gulls, 1606: 'my late shipwreck has made a defeat both of my friends and treasure.'
Malone: See Ham. V, ii, 58, for the word used in the same sense. [See also I, ii, 10.]
549. me] See Abbott, § 220, for instances of 'me' instead of for me, in virtue of its representing the old dative.
550. Ha!] Elze ingeniously suggests that this was a substitution either by the Censor or by the authors themselves, for the objectional oath, 'Swounds; and that both exclamations in the same place cannot be right. The fact that Q, reads 'Sure,' renders it not impossible that the coarser oath was substituted for the milder one by the actors.
552. But] Abbott (§ 122): 'It cannot be (that I am otherwise than a coward),'
i. e. 'it cannot be that I am courageous; on the contrary (but adversative), I am pigeon-liver'd.'
552. pigeon-liver'd] White: It was supposed that pigeons and doves owed their gentleness to the absence of gall. 'A Milk-white Doue . . . About whose Necke was in a Choller wrought "Only like me my mistress hath no gall."'—Drayton's Ninth Eclogue. Clarendon: 'Gall' is here used metaphorically for 'courage;'
so Tro. & Cret. I, iii, 237. [See Harting's Ornithology of Sh. p. 185.] 553. oppression] Collier (ed. 2): It is transgression in the (MS), but 'oppression' is no doubt the proper reading. Hamlet is alluding to his own lack of gall and to 'oppression' being bitter to himself. The old annotator seems to have thought that the hero was referring to transgression on the part of others, which he lacked gall to make bitter to them. Dyce: Hamlet means he lacks gall to make him feel the bitterness of oppression. Singer (Shakespeare's Text Vindicated, p. 264) proposes aggression, a conjecture which the Cam. Edd. mark as 'withdrawn.' I gladly accept the fact on their testimony.

554, 555. I...offal] Sievers (Archiv f. n. Sprachen, vol. vi, 1849, p. 12) maintains that here Hamlet’s plan is revealed, which is, not revenge, not murder, but to bring Claudius to judgement and legal execution as a criminal, upon whose gibbeted carcass the region kites can fatten.

556. kindless] Johnson: Unnatural. Singer: We have ‘kindly’ for natural, i.e. accordance with kind, elsewhere. Hudson: Observe how Hamlet checks himself in this strain of ob jurgation, and then, in mere shame of what he has done, turns to ranting at himself for having ranted.

559. father] Jennens: There seems to be no necessity for this word here; or rather it is tautology. Boswell: The dear murderthe for the dear person murderthe is very far from being a harsh ellipsis. Knight pronounces the text of the Fi ‘a beautiful reading,’ and White declares it ‘a fine form of speech, which needs no support, and which we have had before in this play: I, iii, 67;’ adding that the text of Qq is ‘inferior in both thought and rhythm.’ Halliwell: The ‘dear departed’ is still a common phrase, and the ellipsis in the Fi was, I suspect, in consonance with the phraseology of Shakespeare’s time.

561. Must] Tschischwitz finds a profound meaning in this use of ‘must,’ where he would expect do to be used. It indicates the necessity, so he affirms, that was laid on Hamlet to act just as he does.

563. scullion] Theobald was persuaded that Sh. wrote cullion, i.e. a stupid, heartless, white-livered fellow; as in Lear, II, ii, 36; 2 Hen. VI: I, iii, 43.

564. About] Johnson: Wis, to your work! Brain, go about the present busi ness. STEVENS, after citing ‘My brain about again! for thou hast found New projects now to work on,’ from Heywood, Second Part of The Iron Age, 1632, strangely enough agrees with MONK Mason in thinking it to be a sea-phrase, meaning, ‘be my thoughts shifted into a contrary direction.’ HUNTER (ii, 235): It should be ‘About it, my brains!’ that is, set about composing the lines which the players were to add to The Murder of Gensago.

564. brain] Cambridge Editors: Capell quotes ‘braves’ as the reading of Q2.
His own copy has ‘braines.’ That in the British Museum reads ‘braves.’ [As does also Ashbee’s Facsimile. Ed.]

564. Hum] HUNTER (ii, 235): This is evidently intended to be the first con ception of the design to try the conscience of the King with the play. This interjection of consideration, deliberation, shows it. Yet Hamlet had already settled with the players that they should speak some verses interpolated in The Murder of Gensago. This inconsistency is not justified by alleging Hamlet’s inconsistency of character. In fact, the interjection ought not to be there, as it makes prospective what is evidently retrospective.

Roman Actor, II, i [vol. ii. p. 351, ed. Gifford, 1805], for a similar example there cited.

The meaning is shown in Wase's translation of the Cymurgicon of Gratus, 1654: 'if once set up a piece of white paper, it will make the deer blench, and balk that way,' p. 77. ACT III

SCENE I. A room in the castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you, by no drift of circumstance, 5
Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted,
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,
But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well? 10

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

13. Niggard] WARBURTON: This is given as the description of the conversation of a man whom the speaker found not forward to be sounded; and who kept aloof when they would bring him to confession: but such a description can never pass but at cross purposes. Shakespeare certainly wrote it just the other way [see Textual Notes]. That this is the true reading, we need but to turn back to the preceding scene, for Hamlet’s conduct, to be satisfied. MASON: Warburton forgets that by question, Shakespeare does not usually mean interrogatory, but discourse; yet in whichever sense the word be taken, this account given by Ros. agrees but ill with the scene between him and Ham. as actually represented. MALONE: Slow to begin conversation, but free enough in his answers to our demands. Guild. has just said that Ham. kept aloof when they wished to bring him to confess the cause of his distraction: Ros. therefore here must mean, that up to that point, till they touch’d on that, he was free enough in his answers. HUNTER (ii, 236): According to Warburton’s reading, the account is that which the lords must have rendered of their interview with Hamlet, if they meant to report it truly. Warburton’s emendation has not had justice done to it by other commentators, but we find it confirmed by Q. STAUNTON: Unless ‘question’ is admitted to mean argument, Warburton’s emendation yields a truer description of Hamlet’s bearing towards his schoolfellows than that afforded by the old text. Tschirschwitz finds an insuperable objection to Warburton’s emendation because it would represent Hamlet as not ‘gentlemanlike’ in asking many questions and niggard in replying. ‘It is manifest that Rosencrantz here merely gives utterance to a rule of good manners.’ CLARKE: If it be borne in mind that Sh. employs ‘of’ very variously, and that he occasionally uses the word ‘question’ to signify ‘inquisition,’ ‘cross-examining,’ it appears to be evident that here ‘niggard of question’ elliptically expresses ‘sparing of speech when we cross-examined him;’ and if it be remembered how peculiarly Sh. sometimes employs the possessive case, we think it will be perceived that here ‘of our demands’ is employed to express ‘of demands respecting ourselves.’ Thus, then, we take the whole speech to mean—He was sparing of speech when we questioned him: but of demands respecting ourselves he was very free in return:’ which interpretation completely tallies with the circumstances as they really occurred. CLARENDON: Ros. and Guild. were completely baffled, and Ham. had the talk almost to himself. Perhaps they did not intend to give a correct account of the interview.

13. of our demands] COLLIER (ed. 2): ‘Of’ is altered to to in the (MS), but needlessly, because ‘of’ has here the force of on. CLARENDON: ‘Of’ may be written either by attraction from the previous ‘of,’ or it may be used for ‘on,’ as in Marlowe’s ‘Jew of Malta,’ IV, iv: ‘Of that condition I will drink it up.’ [See ABBOTT, § 173, which may perhaps apply to this use of ‘of.’ Ed.]

To any pastime?
Ros. Madam, it so fell out that certain players

And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it; they are about the court
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.
Pol. 'Tis most true;
And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties
To hear and see the matter.
King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me
To hear him so inclined.—
Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,

56. JOHNSON: Of this celebrated soliloquy, which bursting from a man distracted with contrariety of desires, and overwhelmed with the magnitude of his own purpouses, is connected rather in the speaker's mind than on his tongue, I shall es-[56. To be, or not to be.]

Hamlet, knowing himself injured in the most enormous and atrocious degree, and seeing no means of redress but such as must expose him to the extremity of hazard, meditates on his situation in this manner: Before I can form any rational scheme of action under this pressure of distress, it is necessary to decide whether, after our present state, we are to be, or not to be. That is the question, which, as it shall be answered, will determine whether 'tis nobler, and more suitable to the dignity of reason, to suffer the outrages of fortune patiently, or to take arms against them, and by opposing end them, though perhaps with the loss of life. If to die were to sleep, no more, and by a sleep to end the miseries of our nature, such a sleep were devoutly to be wished; but if to sleep in death be to dream, to retain our powers of sensibility, we must pause to consider in that sleep of death what dreams may come. This consideration makes calamity so long endured; for who would bear the vexations of life, which might be ended by a bare bodkin, but that he is afraid of something in unknown futurity? This fear it is that gives efficacy to conscience, which, by turning the mind upon this regard, chills the ardor of resolution, checks the vigor of enterprise, and makes the current of desire stagnate in inactivity. We may suppose that he would have applied these general observations to his own case, but that he discovered Ophelia. MALONE: Dr Johnson's explication of the first five lines of this passage is surely wrong. Hamlet is not deliberating whether after our present state we are to exist or not, but whether he should continue to live, or put an end to his life; as is pointed out by the second and the three following lines, which are manifestly a paraphrase on the first: 'Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer, &c., or to take arms.' The question concerning our existence in a future state is not considered till the tenth line: 'To sleep! perchance to dream!' &c. See R. of L. 1154. Coleridge: This speech is of absolutely universal interest,—and yet to which of all Shakespeare's characters could it appropriately have been given but to Hamlet? For Jaques it would have been too deep, and for Iago too habitual a communion with the heart; which in every man belongs, or ought to belong, to all mankind.

Lamb (Works, vol. iii, p. 44) 1870): How far the very custom of hearing anything spouted, white w. upon a fine passage, may be seen in those speeches from Hen. V., &c., which are current in the mouths of schoolboys, from their being to be found in Enfield's Speaker, and such kind of books. I confess myself utterly unable to appreciate that celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet, beginning, 'To be, or not to be,' or to tell whether it be good, bad, or indifferent; it has been so handled and pawed about by declamatory boys and men, and torn so inhumanly from its living place and principle of continuity in the play, till it has become to me a perfect dead member. CALDWELL: criticising Dr Johnson, says that the train of thought is obvious enough, only the grammatical thread that technically may call for some unwinding holds that any doubt is here raised by Hamlet as to a future state of existence,—Hamlet is questioning solely what the condition of such existence is to be. 'A desire to be out of the world is one of the most strongly-marked features of Hamlet's character. It is the first wish he utters when alone: I, ii 129. But he is then restrained from anything beyond a wish for suicide by religious scruples. 'The inclination now returns upon him more forcibly (having more cause for such an impulse), and the prohibition of Heaven does not enter into consideration. It is here only, what he shall change his life for. This is the language and subject of a man's mind who is nearer death, than he who only wishes that it were lawful to kill himself.' HUNTER (ii, 236): This soliloquy is placed in Q₂ at the beginning of what is now Act II. It stands there most appropriately. We have seen, at the close of Act I, the state of Hamlet's mind immediately on having received the dread information and the solemn command of the Ghost; we are next presented with what was the state of his mind after a few days' reflection. He enters solus, in a meditative mood, and the subjects of his meditations are among the most awful which can engage mortal thoughts. This is to show his natural mind. Then follows the dialogue with Ophelia, which is intended to show us his artificial mind,—that idle, wandering folly which he assumed, the better to accomplish his object. I can conceive nothing more dramatically proper than this. It prepares for all the succeeding action in which the natural and the artificial Hamlet are so wildly combined. Why there was a change in the arrangement, or by whom it was made, I can no more explain than I can account for many other things connected with the publication of these dramas. But that the play is greatly injured by the change I feel a confident conviction; for not only is this soliloquy wanting in the place most appropriate to it, but it is now found in a place not suitable to it. Such meditations as these are not such as were likely to arise in the mind of one who had just conceived a design by which he hoped to settle a doubt of a very serious kind, and who must have been full of curiosity about the issue of his plot. If this speech is to indicate deliberation concerning suicide, or is even allied to suicide, such deliberation is surely out of place when curiosity was awake, and his mind deeply intent on something that he must do. 'To be sure, the hypothesis of Inconsistency will explain all; but then it will explain anything. Another very material effect is produced by the change in the point at which this solus speech is introduced. The line, 'But look where sadly the poor wretch comes reading,' immediately precedes his entry, when, supposing himself to be unobserved, he gives utterance to the musings of his mind. See also Q₂. It is thus manifest that the poet's intention was that these should be meditations of Hamlet on something which he found written in a book which he holds in his hand, a book which spoke of the evils of life, of death, their cure, of futurity, of the question of being or not being when we have shuffled off this mortal coil, and that what he says arises out of the argument in the book before him, and is not to be regarded as thoughts springing up in his own mind. [See note, line 60.] 'To be, or not to be: ay, there's the point,' as it is in the Quarto, is equivalent to, 'You, the author, are discussing the question of what shall be hereafter; you have a great and mighty subject in hand.' And the words as we now have them, 'To be, or not to be,—that is the question,' are much the same, if we regard, as we may, 'question' as equivalent to theme, argument, or subject. [There is also an analysis of this soliloquy to be found in GOLDSMITH'S Works (vol. iii, p. 316, London, 1854), which attempts to prove that it is 'a heap of absurdities, whether we consider the situation, the sentiment, the argumentation, or the poetry.' This essay and five others have been included in Goldsmith's works on the strength of their having appeared in The British Magazine during the years 1761, 1762, and 1763, but no one, I think, can read them, certainly the one in question, without agreeing with the editor of the edition, PETER CUNNINGHAM, 'that they are not by Goldsmith.' The needless attempt, however, has been made gravely to refute this essay in HACKETT'S Notes and Comments on Shakespeare, New York, 1863, pp. 13-59. For Ge-

\textbf{\textit{Hamlet}}

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
of 'a sea' into assay. It is singular that lexicographers, amongst the several definitions they have ascribed to it, should have failed to include that one peculiar meaning,—charge or onset,—which renders it so appropriate. See II, ii, 71. But by Spenser the word is most frequently used, and its meaning most plainly indicated. See Faerie Queene, V, ii; V, xi. As to the probability of substitution, an equally close approximation exists between assay and 'a sea' as between asters and 'as stars;' nor is it at all certain that even in sound the vowels a and e were so distinctive in those days as in our own. The probability is still greater if it were spelt, as was often the case, with one s. Assay has all the meaning of Pope's conjecture, with the added sense, peculiar to itself, of throttling or simultaneous onset. Thus, too, in III, iii, 69, 'make assay' receives great force and beauty if interpreted, 'throng to the rescue.' [Although A. E. B. was anticipated by Theobald, yet his defence is so vigorous that I have not scrupled to insert it; it is doubtful whether his definition will apply to II, i, 65. Ed.] Bailey (i, 28) maintains that Sh. never could have written anything so inconsequent as lines 59 and 60: Hamlet proposes to himself the question whether he shall or shall not continue to live; but in proceeding to amplify it he performs the operation which is called changing a child at nurse, i.e. he substitutes a totally different question—namely, whether he shall continue to bear his wrongs patiently, or shall fight against them and put them down? It is as if my neighbor Lepidus, whilst deliberating whether he should remain in his present house or quit it, were to say: 'To remain or to quit? That is the question; whether it is better for me to continue to endure rattling windows, &c., or to call in the carpenter, and so put an end to these annoyances.'—vol. ii, p. 305. Accordingly, Bailey believes that logic is vindicated, and the true text restored, by reading 'to take arms against the seat of troubles, And by a poniard, or by depositing, end them.' Or the line 'intrinsically, or considered by itself, might be restored by reading, 'to take arms against a host of troubles';' although the principal fault of the passage would remain unaffected.'—p. 306. Staunton: As Sh. has already furnished us with 'a sea of joys,' 'a sea of glory,' 'a sea of conscience,' 'a sea of wax,' 'a sea of care,' any emendation is very questionable. Halliwell cites: 'Whatsoever it be (which hardly at the length can be depainted) that after a sea of troubles we enjoy in this life,' &c.—The Passenger of Benvenuto, 1612. Knightley (who inclines to Pope's conj.) says that this is almost a solitary instance of the figurative use of 'sea' by Sh. Hackett (p. 51): The 'sea' here is the heart,—the fountain of existence, and it is compared in its agitated condition to a 'sea of troubles.' 'The analogy between the sea, with its ebb and flow, through rivers, channels, and creeks, and the heart, by whose impulse the blood courses through the veins and arteries, must be obvious to every one upon reflection.' Sh. frequently compares the heart to a 'sea.' Ingleby (Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 88): One consideration of the highest importance has been entirely ignored. When Ham. talked of ending his sea of troubles, or, as he afterwards describes it, shuffling off his mortal coil, he had a covert consciousness, a conscience, in fact, which stayed the hand he would have raised against his own life; viz. that this so-called ending and shuffling off was a mere delusion, just as much so as repelling the advancing waves of the sea with shield and spear. Is not the metaphor then sound and whole? If there be an incongruity in the notion of taking arms, offensively or defensively, against the sea, is there not just as great an incongruity in using a bare bodkin against
And by opposing end them? To die,—to sleep,—
No more; and by a sleep to say we end
The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation

the soul,—the immortal part which (as Raleigh has it) 'no stab can kill'? [In proof that the metaphor in question is consistent, and has all the external evidences of authenticity, Ingleby cites a passage from Ritson's Memoirs of the Celts (p. 118), which is itself a translation of one in Ælian, to the effect that the Celts in the wantonness of their bravery 'oppose the overwhelming sea,' and 'taking arms rush upon the waves,' 'in like manner as if they were able to terrify or wound them.'] end them] SEBASTIAN EVANS (Footnote in Ingleby's St. Hermeneutics, p. 92) would omit the pronoun after 'end,' understanding by that word die.

sleep] THEOBALD: This seems to be sneered at by Beau. & Fl. in their Scornful Lady [II, i, Works, vol. iii, p. 25, ed. Dyce]. DOUCE (ii, 238): There is a good deal on this subject in Cardanus's Comforre, 1576, a book which Sh. had certainly read. In fol. 30 it is said: 'In the holy scripture, death is not accompanied other than sleepe, and to dye is sayde to sleepe.' HUNTER (ii, 243): This seems to be the book which Sh. placed in the hands of Hamlet, and the following passages seem to approach so near to the thought of this soliloquy that we cannot doubt that they were in Shakespeare's mind when he put this speech into the mouth of Hamlet:

'How much were it better to follow the counsel of Agathius, who right well commendeth death, sayling, that it did not only remove sickness and all other grief, but also, when all other discommodities of life did happen to man often, it never would come more than once. Seeing, therefore, with such ease men die, what should we account of death to be resembled to anything better than sleep? Moste assured it is that such sleeps are most sweet as be most sound, for those are the best where in like unto dead men we dream nothing. The broken sleeps, the slumber, and dreams full of visions, are commonly in them that have weak and sickly bodies.'—Book ii. CLARENDON: These resemblances to Cardan are not very striking.

more] KNIGHT: Surely the doubt [indicated by Capell's '?'] whether death and sleep are identical comes too early; the reasoning proceeds to assume that they are the same. In line 65 comes the doubt—'perchance to dream.' The 'no more' is nothing more.

to say we] BAILEY (i. 42) thinks that 'to say' here breaks the train of thought, and has nothing to do where it is placed. 'By simply expunging "say we" every one will be sensible how greatly the passage is improved, and that the introduction of saying is a sheer impertinence which could not have proceeded from the clear head of our great dramatist.' But for metre's sake a foot must be supplied, which will be appropriate in sound, form, and sense—this foot Bailey thinks is to be found in straightway.

65. rub] CLARENDON: A term of bowls, meaning a collision hindering the bowl in its course.

66. what dreams] HUNTER (ii, 239): Sh. seems to have been deeply impressed with a feeling of the misery of uneasy dreams; we see it in Clarence, and more awfully in Richard; we have also in his plays the effect of pleasant dreams. [The accent in reading should be laid on ‘what.’ It is the kind of dreams from which Hamlet here recoils, not from the mere fact of dreaming; the horror at that supposition is expressed in line 65. Ed.]

67. coil] WARBURTON: Turmoil, bustle. HEATH: The incumbrance of this mortal body. STREEVENS: Compare A Dolfull Discours of Two Strangers, &c., published by Churchyard, among his Chippes, 1575: ‘Yes, shaking off this sinfull soyle Me thinke in cloudes I see,’ &c. M. MASON (p. 383) agrees with Heath in referring this to the body, this ‘covering of flesh,’ and is persuaded that we should read ‘mortal spoile,’ which is the same word as the slough which the snake casts every year. In sense it means the same as ‘the case of flesh,’ in BONDUCU [IV, iv, p. 82, Beau. & Fl. Works, ed. Dyce]; and again, ‘a separation Betwixt this spirit and the case of flesh.’—The Elder Brother [IV, iii, p. 252, Beau. & Fl. Works, ed. Dyce]; but the most complete parallel is ‘this muddy vesture of decay.’—Mer. of Ven. V, 1, 64.

CALDE-COTT: It is here used in each of its senses: turmoil, or bustle, and that which entwines or wraps round. Snakes generally lie like the coils of ropes; and, it is conceived, that an allusion is here had to the struggle which that animal is obliged to make in casting his slough. HUNTER (ii, 240): He was thinking of the coil of a rope. With this expression ‘shuffled off’ better coheres. SINGER: It is remarkable that under garbuglio, which corresponds in Italian to our ‘coil,’ Florio has ‘a pecke of troubles,’ of which Shakespeare’s ‘sea of troubles’ may be only an aggrandized idea.

ELZE: With what reason can turmoil or noise be termed mortal? And how can we shuffle off a mortal noise? We are convinced that under ‘coil’ is concealed an error which we can remedy by an almost imperceptible change, if instead of ‘coil’ we read vail. Vail means a covering, an integument, and our body is the mortal covering or integument which we must shuffle off in order to enter on the life beyond. In Botany vail is the envelope, the chalypter of mosses, which enfolds the fructifying organs and which is burst by them, and it is not impossible that it was used generally for the envelope of buds. We do not venture to assert that Sh. knew this meaning of the word, but we know with what keen looks he must have examined nature. Beyond a doubt, clay would be better, but it would harmonise less with the received text. Elze (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, vol. ii, p. 362) advocates the substitution of soil for ‘coil,’ which word he found in the Dolfull Discours, quoted.
Act III, Sc. i.] HAMLET

That makes calamity of so long life;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,

by Steevens. Else supports his conjecture very ably, but it is needless. 'Shuffle' decides; a coil may be said to be shuffled off, but soil would be shaken off. HUDSON: As Wordsworth has it: 'the fretful stir unprofitable, and the fever of the world.' In N. & Qu. 23 Feb. '56, INGLEBY started the question of how far the popular interpretation of 'coil,' as the body, is justified; the discussion was continued by 'X.' on the 15 March following, who maintained that in every instance where the word is used by Sh. it means turmoil, tumult; and in a second communication to the same journal on the 11th Oct., the same correspondent pertinently asks whether the contrast be not intended between 'coil' and 'quietus.' INGLEBY replied (8 Nov. '56) that the interpretation of body for 'coil' was a popular error, not his, and that it perhaps arose, as suggested to him by a correspondent, from a confusion on the part of the public between the present passage and Colossians, iii, 9, with a reference also to 2 Corinthians, v, 1–5. H. T. RILEY (8 Nov. '56, also) has no doubt that 'coil' refers to the body, and that it was probably suggested by Romans, vii, 24. The coil received its quietus on 18 Sept. '58, by 'A. M. of Greenock,' who cites a derivation of the word from the Gaelic cochul, meaning the scaly integument which clothes the lower limbs of a mermaid [1]. INGLEBY, however, in his excellent Sh. Hermeneutics (p. 88, footnote), says that the analogies are too strong in favor of the 'mortal coil' being what Fletcher, in Bondura, calls the 'case of flesh.' [Caldecott's interpretation, that 'coil' is used in both senses, seems to me the true one. Ed.]

68. respect] WARBURTON: Consideration, motive. SINGER: This is Shakespeare's most usual sense of the word.

70. time] WARBURTON: The evils complained of are not the product of time or duration only, but of a corrupted age or manners. We may be sure that Sh. wrote 'of th' time.' JOHNSON: 'Whips' and 'scorns' have no great connection with one another, or with time. Though at all times scorn may be endured, the times that put men ordinarily in danger of whips are very rare. If 'whips' be retained, read: 'whips and scorns of tyrants.' But I think that quip [anticipated by GREY (ii, 295). Ed.], a sneer, a sarcasm, is the proper word. I propose, but not confidently, 'the quips and scorns of title.' [These conjectures of Johnson's were omitted in the Variorum of 1793 and subsequent ones. Ed.] STEEVENS: I think we might venture to read, 'whips and scorns of the times,' i.e. times satirical as the age of Sh., which probably furnished him with the idea. HUNTER (ii, 240): 'Time' is used by early writers as equivalent to the modern expression, The Times. Taylor the Water Poet has: 'mock'd in rhyme, And made the only scornful theme of Time.' Sh. himself seems to use time in the same manner in Rich. III: IV, iv, 106. CLARENDON: Compare Southwell, Saint Peter's Complaint, stanza v, l. 4 [p. 12, ed. Grosart]: 'The acrene of Time, the infamy of Fame.'
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of disprized love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country from whose bourn
No traveller returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all,
And thus the native hue of resolution

misery. FARMER: This has been carvilled at by Lord Orrery and others, but without reason. The idea of a traveller in Shakespeare's time was of a person who gave an account of his adventures. STEEVES: Compare, 'Qui nunc it per iter tenescrium, illuc unde negant redivire quenquam.'—Catullus. DOUCE: No translation of Catullus into English is known to have been made. Both writers may have casually adopted the same sentiment. MALONE (anticipated, however, by GENTLEMAN, in the Dramatic Censor, i, 23, 1770) asserts that Sh. meant that from the unknown regions of the dead no traveller returns with all his corporeal powers, such as he who goes on a voyage of discovery brings back. The Ghost being 'inviolable as the air,' was consequently incorporeal. SCHLEGEL (Lectures, &c. ii, 196, footnote): Sh. wished purposely to show that Ham. could not fix himself in any conviction of any kind whatever. ROFFE (p. 31): According to that philosophy which the Spiritualist believes to have been Shakespeare's, Ham. was perfectly correct in using this phraseology. Surely there is no skepticism in Ham., nor inadvertency in Sh.: a departed spirit appears to the spiritual eyes of the man, and not to his natural eyes; consequently does not, and cannot, overpass 'the bourn' which separates the spiritual and causal world from the natural and effect world. COLERIDGE silences the question for ever: 'If it be necessary to remove the apparent contradiction,—if it be not rather a great beauty,—surely it were easy to say that no traveller returns to this world, as to his home or abiding-place.' HARTLEY COLERIDGE (Essays and Miscellaneous, i, 170): I will not say that an apparition might not confirm the faith of an Hereafter, where it pre-existed, but where that faith was not, or was neutralised by an inward misery, implicated with the very sense of being, its effect would be but momentary or occasional,—a source of perplexity, not of conviction,—throwing doubt at once on the conclusions of the understanding and the testimony of the senses, and fading itself into the twilight of uncertainty, making existence the mere shadow of a shade.

96. aught] Dowden (p. 139): As things were, Ham. quickly learned, and the knowledge embittered him, that Oph. could neither receive great gifts of soul, nor in return render equivalent gifts. There is an exchange of little tokens between the lovers, but of the large exchange of soul there is none, and Ham. in his bitter mood can truthfully exclaim: 'I never gave you aught.'

97. I know] Corson: Ophelia's meaning is, The remembrances you gave me may have been trifles to you, such trifles as left no impression on your mind of your having given them; but I know right well you did, as they were most dear to me at the time. 'I' should be read with a strong upward circumflex.

99. lost] Daniel (p. 75): The Ff give a very good reading, or qy. ref. In the next line read, 'Take them again.'

102. There, my lord] Marshall (p. 28): At this point, just as Oph. is going to force back on Ham. the sweet remembrances of his love, the fussy old Polonius, who has been fidgeting behind the arras, anxious to see the result of his most notable device, pops his head out, and in so doing drops his chamberlain's staff. Ham. hears the noise, and instantly suspects the truth, that he is being made the object of an artfully devised scheme to entrap him into some confession of his secret.

103. Richardson (Essays, &c., fifth ed., 1797, p. 102): Hamlet's air and manner—here should not be perfectly grave and serious. Nor is there anything in this dialogue to justify the tragic tone with which it is frequently spoken. Let Ham. be represented as delivering himself in a light, airy, unconcerned, and thoughtless manner, and the rudeness, so much complained of, will disappear. Coleridge: Here it is evident that the penetrating Ham. perceives, from the strange and forced manner of Oph., that the sweet girl was not acting a part of her own, but was a decoy; and his after-speeches are not so much directed to her as to the listeners and spies. Such a discovery in a mood so anxious and irritable accounts for a certain harshness in him;—and yet a wild upworking of love, sporting with opposites in a wilful self-tormenting strain of irony, is perceptible throughout. 'I did love you once;'—'I lov'd you not;'—and particularly in his enumeration of the faults of the sex from which Oph. is so free, that the mere freedom therefrom constitutes her character. Note Shakespeare’s charm of composing the female character by the absence of characters, that is, marks and out-jottings. Lamb (iii, 95, ed. 1870): All the Hamlets that I have ever seen, rant and rave at Oph. as if she had committed some great crime, and the audience are highly pleased, because the words of the part are satirical, and they are enforced by the strongest expression of satirical indignation of which the face and voice are capable. But then, whether Ham. is likely to have put on such brutal appearances to a lady whom he loved so dearly, is never thought on. The truth is, that in all such deep affections as had subsisted between Ham. and Oph. there is a stock of supererogatory love (if I may venture to use the expression), which in any great grief of heart, especially where that which preys upon the mind cannot be communicated, confers a kind of indulgence upon the grieved party to express itself, even to its heart’s dearest object, in the language of a temporary alienation; but it is not alienation, it is purely a distraction, and so it always makes itself to be felt by that object; it is not anger, but grief assuming the appearance of anger,—love awkwardly counterfeiting hate, as sweet countenances when they try to frown; but such sternness and fierce disgust as Ham. is made to show is no counterfeit, but the real face of absolute aversion,—of irreconcilable alienation. It may be said he puts on the madman; but then he should only so far put on this counterfeit lunacy as his own real distraction will give him leave; that is, incompletely, imperfectly; not in that confirmed, practised way, like a master of his art, or, as Dame Quickly would say, ‘like one of those harlotry players.’ Hazlitt (p. 110): Hamlet’s conduct to Oph. is quite natural in his circumstances. It is that of assumed severity only. It is the effect of disappointed hope, of bitter regrets, of affection suspended, not obliterated, by the distraction of the scene around him! Amidst the natural and preternatural horrors of his situation, he might be excursion in delicacy from carrying on a regular courtship. When his ‘father’s spirit was in arms,’ it was not the time for the son to make love in. He could neither marry Oph., nor wound her mind by explaining the cause of his alienation, which he durst hardly trust himself to think of. It would have taken him years to come to a direct explanation on the point. In the harassed state of his mind he could not have done otherwise than he did. His conduct does not contradict what he says of his love for her when he sees her grave. Vischer (Krit. Gänge, p. 102) conjectures that Ham. suspects that the Queen is eavesdropping, and that what he says here is aimed at her.

103. honest] Staunton: That ‘honest’ in this dialogue is equivalent to chast or virtuous, it would be superfluous to mention, but that some critics, in their stricures on the conduct of Hamlet in the present scene, appear to have forgotten it. The beginning recalls to mind some passages in Shirley’s, The Royal Master, IV, 1: ‘King: Are you honest? Theo: Honest! King: I could have used the name of chaste Or virgin; but they carry the same sense.’—[Works, vol. iv, p. 156, ed. Dyce.] CLARENDON: See Winter’s Tale II, i, 68 and 76.
Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was sometime a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

107, 108. honesty...beauty] Johnson: The true reading seems to be: 'you should admit your honesty to no discourse with your beauty.' This is the sense evidently required. Caldecott: 'If you really possess these qualities, chastity and beauty, and mean to support the character of both, your honesty should be so chary of your beauty as not to suffer a thing so fragile to entertain discourse, or to be parleyed with.' The lady, 'tis true, interprets the words otherwise, giving them the turn that best suited her purpose. Singer: 'Honesty may be corrupted by flattering discourse addressed to beauty.' Ham. remarks respecting women generally. Clarendon: Hamlet says that honesty or virtue, personified as the guardian of beauty, should allow none, not even himself, to discourse with the latter.

116 and 120. Mrs Jameson (i, 275): Those who ever heard Mrs Siddons read Hamlet cannot forget the world of meaning, of love, of sorrow, of despair, conveyed in these two simple phrases. Here and in lines 155, 156, are the only allusions to herself and her own feelings in the course of the play; and these, uttered almost without consciousness on her own part, contain the revelation of a life of love, and disclose the secret burthen of a heart bursting with its own unuttered grief.

MARSHALL (A Study of Hamlet, p. 28): Ham., before condemning Oph. as accomplice in the contemptible trick of spying on him, wishes to put her to the n proof; he therefore turns round and holds out his hand towards her; she, foring her part, and thinking, poor girl, that he is going to take her to his breast and give her, flies across to him; he checks her with his outstretched hand, and, hold-

All odd. who notice this line justify the reading of Qq., even while following the Qq in their text. Rohrbach, in his clever book, in which, with the utmost gravity, he turns all that Ham. does or says into ridicule, asserts (p. 136) that the text of Qq is correct, and conveys Shakespeare's true meaning: 'Are not Hamlet's bravado and his two conversations with Oph. more in the style of a soldier, bred in the camps of Elizabeth's time, than of a scholar? And is not his sword that of a student—notably, a rapier, with which he is matched against Laerdes? Is not his fighting a mere pastime of the fencing school? jangl'd, out of tune Cap. et cet.

pare 2 _Hen. IV_: II, iii, 21. Tschirschwitz: 'Mould of form' would be a disagreeable pleonasm, were not 'form' to be understood as equivalent to _ceremony_, _external rites_.

156. _music-vows] For instances of noun-compounds see Abbott, § 430; also, § 22: Music is not commonly used by us as a prefix, unless the suffix is habitually connected with 'music;' thus, 'music-book,' 'music-master,' &c., but not 'music' for _musical_, as here. Clareendon: Another mixed metaphor.
158. _tune] See Mach. IV, iii, 235, and notes. Corson: The phrase, 'out of tune,' is certainly an adverbial element to 'jangled,' and not an adjective element to 'sweet bells.' The two ideas attached to 'bells' are: 1. 'jangled out of tune;' 2. 'harsh,' which expresses to what extent 'jangled out of tune.'
159. _feature] Caldecott: 'The feature and fashion, or the proportion and figure of the whole bodie. Conformatio quaedam et figura totius oris et corporis.'—Baret's _Athearsius_. Dyce (Glos.): _Form_, person in general.
159. _blown] Capell (i, 136): Youth in its bloom. Clareendon: The metaphor from a flower, as in 152, is resumed here.
160. _ecstasy] See II, i, 102.
161. _see] Elze: It is evident that after these words Oph. goes to find his father, in order to tell him the result of the interview which had just taken place. Not finding him, she returns, and is greeted with 'How now, Ophelia?' line 178, but is immediately sent away again by her father. 'That Oph. should be present during the King's speech addressed to his confidential counsellor is more than improbable. I have therefore inserted the appropriate stage-directions in the text.' Tschirschwitz: After these words Oph. remains lost in painful thoughts until she is addressed by her father. Miles (p. 45): Oph. is most deject and wretched, but without even a suspicion of being badly treated. Nor is she badly treated. The resentment of neglected love may infuse his dazzling satire, but Re-enter King and Polonius.

King Love? his affections do not that way tend;
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And I do doubt the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger; which for to prevent,
I have in quick determination
Thus set it down: he shall with speed to England,
For the demand of our neglected tribute;
Haply the seas and countries different
With variable objects shall expel
This something-settled matter in his heart, Whereon his brains still beating puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well; but yet do I believe
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his griefs; let her be round with him;
And I'll be placed, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference. If she find him not,
To England send him, or confine him where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so;
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go. [Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Stage-direction] Collier: The (MS) adds ‘unready’ after ‘Players,’ that is to say, not yet ‘tired for the parts they were to fill in the play within a play.’
1. Coleridge: This dialogue of Ham. with the Players is one of the happiest instances of Shakespeare’s power of diversifying the scene while he is carrying on the plot. Steevens (Hamlet, Leipzig, 1854, note 13, p. 263) maintains that this advice of Ham. to the Player does not apply to acting in general, but only to the acting of the Court-play, and most particularly to the acting of his dozen or sixteen lines, which Steevens conceives to be lines 243–248, ‘Thoughts black, hands apt,’ &c.
3. your] Here used ethically; see I, v, 167; also Abbott, § 221.
8. hear] White: I am not sure that the Ff are wrong. See is the verb most commonly applied to the observation of dramatic performances of all kinds. Corson: This is more addressed to the eye than to the ear. His robustiousness and his periwig-patedness are seen alone, as are also the distortions through which he endeavors to exhibit the passion; it is only what he says that is addressed to the ear. [The ‘ears of the groundlings’ are not ‘split’ by what they see. Ed.]

9. periwig-pated] STEEVENS: In the time of Sh. players most generally seem to have worn periwigs; wigs were not in common use till the reign of Charles II.
In Every Woman in her Humour, 1609: '—as none wear hoods but monks and ladies; and feathers but fore-horses, &c.,—none periwig but players and pictures.'
MORELLY: 'Periwig' is simply an anglicised pronunciation of Perruque.

10. groundlings] STEEVENS: In its primitive signification it means a fish, which always keeps at the bottom of the water. In our early play-houses the pit had neither floor nor benches. Hence the term 'groundlings' for those who frequented it. Jonson mentions them with equal contempt: '—the understanding gentlemen of the ground here ask'd my judgement.'—[Bartholomew Fair, Induct. p. 356, Works, ed. Gifford.
There are other derisive allusions to them on the same page and on the next. Ed.] Again: '—give me the penny, I care not for the gentleman, I; let me have good ground.'—The Case is Altered, I, I [p. 327, Works, ed. Gifford].
NAME: From this last extract we see that the price paid by these gentry was then only a penny. See also, in the same play, II, iv [p. 361]. Also: 'Besides, sir, all our galleries and ground-stands are furnished, and the groundlings within the yard grow infinitely unruly.'—Lady Alimony, I, I.

II. inexplicable] JOHNSON: That is, shows without words to explain them.
STEnevS: Rather, shows which are too confusedly conducted to explain themselves. There is one of those in Heywood's The Four Prentices, 1615, as may be seen from the following: 'Enter Tancred, with Bella Franca richly attired, she somewhat affecting him, though she makes no show of it.' [I, i, p. 442, ed. Dodsley, 1825]. Surely this may be called an inexplicable dumb show.

13. Termagant] STEEvens: The name (says Percy) given in the old romances to the god of the Saracens; in which he is constantly linked with Mahound or Mohammed. Thus, in the legend of Guy of Warwick, the Soudan swears: 'So help me Mahoun of might, And Termagant, my God so bright.' Ritson: 'Grennyng upon her lyke Termagauntes in a play.'—Bale's Acts of English Votaries, Reticues, i, 77.
NAME: This imaginary personage was introduced into our old plays and moralities, and represented as of a most violent character, so that a ranting actor might always appear to advantage in it. Sh. uses it as an adjective in I Hen. IV: V, iv, 114.
It is the Trivignante of the Italians, or Termagant of the French Romancers. Both Singer and Wedgwood cite Florio, 1611: 'Termigiate, a great boaster, quarreler, killer, tamer or ruler of the universe; the child of the earthquake and of the thunder, the brother of death.' CLARENDON: Spenser spells it 'Termagant.' In Sir Bevis of Hamtown, line 659, it is spelled 'Teragaunt.' It occurs as 'Terma-

MOBERLY: If the common form, Terms, be accurate, it is not impossible that the name may be founded on the word Ramazan; the name of the solemnity being imagined to be that of a god worshipped at it, and the letter r being simply the beginning of the vibration, as it is of the l vibration in such Welsh words as Llangollen.

13. Herod) STEEVES: The character of Herod in the ancient mysteries was always a violent one. Thus, in The Chester Plays [p. 153, ed. Sh. Soc.], Herod says of himself: 'For I am kinge of all mankind, I bynde, I beate, I lose, I bynde, I maister the moone, take this in mynde, That I am meste of mighte. I am the greaste above degree, That is, that was, that ever shalbe,' &c. Chaucer, speaking of the parish-clerk, Absolon, says: 'He pleythe Herodes vp on a scaffold hye.'—The Miller's Tale—3384, Hengwrt MS. DOUCE gives a long extract from an ancient Pageant, performed at Coventry by the Shearmen and Taylors, in 1534, but the composition of which is of a much earlier date. To illustrate the present passage, and to give an idea of the boundless rant of the bragart tyrant, it is sufficient to cite such lines as these: 'I am the myghtyst conquereor that ever walkid on gownd.' 'All the whole world from the north to the sowthe, I ma them distraye with won worde of my mouthe.' And of his enemies, 'with a tunke of my nee not won be left alyve.' At one place the stage-direction gives unlimited freedom to the actor to tear a passion to tatters, and to make all split: 'Here Erde ragis in thys pagond, and in the strete also.'—See Magnus Herodes, in The Towneley Mysteries, p. 140, ed. Surtees Soc.; The Slaughter of the Innocents, in The Coventry Mysteries, p. 183, ed. Sh. Soc.; King Herod, Ibid. p. 291; The Slaughter of the Innocents, in The Chester Plays, p. 172, ed. Sh. Soc.

19. from] For instances of 'from,' meaning apart from, away from, without a verb of motion, see Abbott, § 158; also Much. III, iv. 36.

21. scorn] BAILEY (ii, 9): Why should 'scorn' be antithetic to 'virtue'? It may be on the side of goodness as well as opposed to it. Wherefore read sin, which spelt sime as in the old copies of Hamlet, was 'easily pervertible' into scorn.

22. very age] JOHNSON: The 'age' of the 'time' can hardly pass. May we not read, the face and body, or did Sh. write, the page? The page suits well with ‘form’ and ‘pressure,’ but ill with ‘body.’ Steevens: The text means: to represent the manners of the time suitable to the period that is treated of, according as it may be ancient or modern. M. Mason: Read, ‘every age and body of the time,’ and the sense will be: ‘show virtue her own likeness, and every stage of life, every profession or body of men, its form and resemblance.’ Malone: Perhaps Sh. did not mean to connect these words. It is the end of playing, says Hamlet, to show the age in which we live, and the body of the time, its form and pressure; to delineate exactly the manners of the age, and the particular humor of the day.

Keightley (Exp. 292): We might feel inclined to read world for ‘time,’ but no change is required. Bailey (ii, 8): Read visage, which is so near ‘very age’ in the ductus literarum. Compare ‘visage of the times,’ 2 Hen. IV: II, iii, 3. Silberschlag (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1114): This is essentially the same definition of the drama which Cervantes in Don Quixote puts into the mouth of the Priest: ‘Comedy,’ he says, ‘according to the opinion of Cicero, should be a mirror of human life, a model of manners, a representation of truth.’ Both Sh. and Cervantes clearly drew their definitions from Cicero; Cervantes says so expressly, while Sh. intimates in the phrase, ‘both at the first and now,’ that he gave an ancient definition of the drama, but he does not mention Cicero’s name, because it was not his style, in the works of his riper years, to display his knowledge, or to support his opinions, by the citation of authorities. His use of ‘hic et ubique,’ in I, v, 156, affords a proof [noted ad loc.] that the end of that scene was written many years earlier than the rest of the drama.

23. pressure] Johnson: Resemblance, as in a print. Bailey (ii, 9): We may obtain something better than Dr. Johnson’s interpretation by substituting posture for ‘pressure;’ then we shall really have two distinct things: the shape and the attitude. Clarendon: See I, v, 100. So ‘impressure’ in As You Like It, III, v, 23.

23. come] Clarendon: For a similar use of this participle without ‘being’ or ‘having,’ compare R. of L. 1784.

25. censure] Clarendon: Judgement, as in I, iii, 69.

25. the which one] Caldecott: The judgement of which one class or description of persons (‘one of whom’ had been more familiar language). Delius and Clarendon understand it as meaning the ‘judicious man singly.’ Tischschwitz agrees with Caldecott.
ance o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. Oh, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly, not to speak it profanely, that neither having the accent of Christians nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made them, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

27. praise] praif d Q,F,Q,F. praif d Qd, 30. nor man] Nor Turke Q, El. or Norman F, Rowe, nor Musulman Farmer. or man Pope, Han. Johns. or Turk White, Huds.

28, 30. neither...nor man.] Bracketed as a 'foolish interpolation,' by Warb.

29. accent of Christians] accent of Christian Pope +, nor the] or the Rowe ii, Pope.

26. theatre] MALONE: Compare Jonson's Poetaster, 1601, '—if I prove the pleasure but of one, If he judicious be, he shall be alone A theatre unto me.'

26. there be] For instances of the more common use of be with the plural than the singular, see ABBOTT, § 300.

28. profanely] JOHNSTON: This seems to relate, not to the praise which he has mentioned, but to the censure he is about to utter. Any gross or indelicate language was called profane. MASON: This refers to the praise given to the players; Ham. considering it as a kind of profanation to praise persons highly who were so undeserving of it. The construction is 'highly, not to say profanely.' CALDECOTT: Hamlet says that he does not mean to speak profanely by saying that there could be any such thing as a journeymen Creator. [The profanity consists in alluding to Christians. ED.]

30. nor man] COLLIER (ed. 2) : Farr er's conj. receives some countenance from Q. The (MS) amends to 'nor man.' WHITE: The reading of the Qq is even more absurd than that of the Ff, as if Christians and pagans were not men! The distinction, Christian, Turk, and Pagan, was not uncommon. See Howell, in Richardson's Dict. s. v. 'pagan.' CLARENCEON: This means, nor even man.

31. journeymen] MALONE: The notion of Nature keeping a shop and employing journeymen to form mankind was common in Shakespeare's time. See Lyly's Woman in the Moon, 1597: 'They draw the curtains from before Nature's shop, where stands an image clad and some unclad.'

31. had made them] THEOBAld (Sh. Restored, p. 173): According to the Qq and Ff, Hamlet is supposed to reason that because he had seen some very preposterous players, he should think, therefore, that Nature's journeymen had made all mankind, for so men in this place without some or those prefixed must imply. Might not Sh. more probably have written them? [Theobald gives two instances: Love's Lab. Lost, III, i, 25, and Com. of Err. II, ii, 81, where 'them' and the men have been confounded. But as he does not allude to this emendation in his subsequent edition, it is to be presumed that he withdrew it. It is to me, however, so clearly the correct reading that I do not hesitate to follow it, although all other editors except two have adhered to the text of the QqFf, which is 'had made men.' RANN adopts Theobald's emendation, and HUDSON adopts Farmer's conj., 'had made the men.' CLARENCEON suggests 'em.' ED.]
First Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us, sir.

Ham. Oh, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them; for there be of them that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too, though in the mean time some necessary question of the play be then to be considered; that's villainous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—

55. candied] DYCE ( Gloss.): Sugared, flattering, glozing. CLARENDON: Sh. has unconsciously made a bold use of the figure synecdoche when he makes the 'candied tongue' 'crock the hinges of the knee.' Of course, by 'the candied tongue' he really means the flatterer himself. TSCHISCHWITZ construes 'crock' as a neuter imperative.

55. absurd] CLARENDON: In all other passages Sh. accents this word on the second syllable.

56. pregnant] JOHNSON: Quick, ready, prompt. NAES: Artful, designing, full of deceit, the ruling sense of this word is being full, or productive of something. CALDECOTT: 'Pregnant' is bowed, swelled out, presenting themselves, as the form of pregnant animals. KIGHTLEY: I see not what 'pregnant' can mean here. It might be better to read phant, or some such word. CLARENDON: Lear, IV, vi, 227, and Twelfth Night, III, i, 100, support the interpretation, 'ready to bow at the owner's bidding.' In this sense it is opposed to 'stubborn.' See III, iii, 70. ['Pregnant', because untold thrift is born from a cunning use of the knee. Ed.]

57. fawning] STRATMANN: Faining of the Folio is not a misprint, but another form of fawning, just as good, if not better. See Dict. of Old English, s. v.
'fainen.'

59. Ritson prefers the Qq, and says that 'distinguish her election' is no more than 'make her election;' distinguish of men is exceeding harsh, to say the best of it. TSCHISCHWITZ, however, points out 'distinguish of colours,' 2 Hen. VI: II, i, 130. COXON: 'Distinguish her election' is decidedly Shakespearean, and may be what Sh. wrote. The use of a cognate accusative is a marked feature of Shakespeare's diction. [See II, ii, 27. Ed.]

60-66. for . . . please.] DEERING (p. 62): In these lines Ham. delineates, trait by trait, a character the very opposite of his own. Here is to be found the best motto for the tragedy.
Hath ta'en with equal thanks; and blest are those Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled
That they are not a pipe for Fortune’s finger
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man
That is not passion’s slave, and I will wear him
In my heart’s core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee. Something too much of this.
There is a play to-night before the king;
One scene of it comes near the circumstance,
Which I have told thee, of my father’s death;

63. Hath] Fl, Rowe, Pope, Han. (Notes, i, pt. ii, p. 24)
64. commingled] Dyce, co-mingled
68. of heart] of hearts Q3.76.

63. Hath] Corson: Hath of the Q3 is a solecism. Though the subject-nominative ‘thou’ is second person, the predicate-nominative ‘man’ is third person, and being the antecedent of the relative ‘that,’ determines the person of the verb to which ‘that’ is the nominative or subject.

64. blood and judgement] Johnson: According to the doctrine of the four humors, desire and confidence were seated in the blood, and judgement in the phlegm, and the due mixture of the humors made a perfect character. Caldecott: Passions and reason. [See IV, iv, 58.]

66. please] For other instances of ‘please’ in the subjunctive, see Walker, Crit. i, 207.

68. core] Douce (ii, 245): From this speech Anthony Scoloker, in Daiphantus, or The Passions of Love, 1604, has stolen the following line: ‘Oh, I would weare her in my heart’s-heart-gore;’ whereupon Clarendon asks, should not ‘gore’ be core?

69. Something, &c.] Clarke: The genuine manliness of this little sentence, where Ham. checks himself when conscious that he has been carried away by fervor of affectionate friendship into stronger protestation than mayhap becomes the truth and simplicity of sentiment between man and man, is precisely one of Shakespeare’s exquisite touches of innate propriety in questions of feeling. Let any one, who doubts for a moment whether Sh. intended that Ham. should merely feign madness, read carefully over the present speech, marking its sobriety of expression even amid all its ardor, its singleness and purity of sentiment amid its most forcible utterance, and then decide whether it could be possible that he should mean Hamlet’s wits to be touched. That his heart is shaken to its core, that he is even afflicted with melancholy and hypochondria, we admit; but that his intellects are in the very slightest degree disordered, we cannot for one instant believe.

72. thee] Corson: This comma after ‘thee’ serves to show that the phrase, ‘of my father’s death,’ is connected with ‘circumstance,’ and not with ‘told,’ at 1 in neat printing, should not be omitted.
I prithee, when thou seest that act a-foot, 74

74. very comment] CALDECOTT: The most intense direction of every faculty.
74. thy soul] KNIGHT: Hamlet having told Hor. the ‘circumstances’ of his father’s death, and imparted his suspicions of his uncle, entreats his friend to observe his uncle ‘with the very comment of my soul,’—Hamlet’s soul. To ask Hor. to observe him with the comment of his own soul (Horatio’s) is a mere feeble expletive. COLLIER in his first edition also advocated the reading of the Ff, but followed the Q4 and the (MS) in his second. DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 214) criticises the upholders of the text of the Ff in this passage, and says that Knight’s text of this tragedy is ‘beyond all doubt the worst that has appeared in modern times.’ Dyce thinks that the important word ‘very,’ as Caldecott has interpreted it above, demands ‘thy.’ CORSON maintains just the opposite; he prefers my, as more expressive. Hamlet’s meaning is, I would have thee so enter into my feelings, so identify thyself with me, that when thou seest that act a-foot, even with the very comment of my soul, thou wilt observe my uncle. ‘My’ also gives force to ‘Even with the very,’ which has less force in the other reading. Dyce furthermore points out why Ham. wished Hor. to watch his uncle so closely, when he tells him that ‘after we will both our judgements join In censure of his seeming.’
75. occulted] CLARENDON: The word seems to occur here only.
76. one speech] HUNTER (ii, 247): The speech which Hamlet himself had prepared for the players.
77. damned] Douce (ii, 245): The ghost of a person sentenced for his wickedness to damnation, and which in this instance has deceived us. Thus Spenser, Fairy Queen, b. i, canto 2, st. 32. TSCHISCHWITZ: This is the third time that this theological reflection occurs to the Prince. See l, iv, 40; II, ii, 575.
79. Vulcan’s] DELIUS: The connection of thought between Vulcan’s realm and the Christian Hell whence the ‘damned ghost’ issues, is very common among Shakespeare’s contemporaries.
79. stithy] THEOBALD substituted Smithy, on the ground that ‘stithy’ meant an anvil, and ‘an anvil is far from being the dirtiest thing in a smith’s shop.’ But CALDECOTT says that stithy, stith, and stich were the same, and used indifferently to express either the iron to work upon, or the forge, or the workshop; though in later times stich has been confined to the sense of anvil, and ‘stithy’ to that of shop.

85. idle] DELIUS: This signifies the aimless going hither and thither which marks an idiot. On the entrance of the Court, Hamlet intends to resume the role which he had before assumed. See Lear, I, iii, 16: 'Idle old man.' STAUNTON:
Sh. employs 'idle' in the sense of mad several times; among others see Q, [line

93. university] COLERIDGE: To have kept Hamlet's love for Ophelia before the audience in any direct form, would have made a breach in the unity of interest; —but yet to the thoughtful reader it is suggested by his spite to poor Polonius, whom he can not let rest. FARMER infers that the common players were occasionally admitted to perform in the universities on the strength of an application for that purpose in Vice Chancellor Hatcher's Letters to Lord Burghley, 1580. But CALDECOTT thinks this extract merely shows that applications of this sort were occasionally made; not that they were accepted; on the contrary, the governors were always disposed to find reasons for rejecting them. Wherefore, in the absence of direct evidence, Caldecott thinks that the probability of stage plays having been performed in the universities by professed actors is strongly negatived. That he was mistaken will be seen from the reference to Q, by Clarendon. MALONE: The practice of acting Latin plays in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge is very ancient, and continued to near the middle of the last century. They were performed occasionally for the entertainment of princes and other great personages; and regularly at Christmas, at which time a Lord of Misrule was appointed at Oxford, to regulate the exhibitions, and a similar officer with the title of Imperator at Cambridge. The most celebrated actors at Cambridge were the students of St John's and King's colleges; at Oxford those of Christ-Church. In the hall of that college a Latin comedy called Marcus Geminus, and the Latin tragedy of Phœbus, were performed before Queen Elizabeth in the year 1566; and in 1564, the Latin tragedy of Dido was played before Her Majesty, when she visited the university of Cambridge. CLARENDON: In 1564.

On Sunday evening, Aug. 6, Queen Elizabeth saw the Aulularia of Plautus in the minstrelsy of King's College Chapel. On the occasion of the visit of James I and Prince Charles to Cambridge in 1614 plays were performed in the Hall of Trinity College; among them the comedies of Ignoramus and Albumasar, which have escaped oblivion. On the title-page of Q. it is said, 'As it hath beene diverse times acted by his Highnesse servants in the Cittie of London: as also in the two Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, and else-where.'

96. enact | DELIUS recognises in this word that affected style of speech in which Hamlet purposely addressed Polonius. CORSON: The Fl reading has a touch of the contemptuous imparted to it by the initial word 'And.' 'What, I pray, or for sooth, did you enact?'

97. Caesar | MALONE: A Latin play on the subject of Caesar's death was performed in Oxford in 1582; and several years before a Latin play on the same subject, by Jacques Grevin, was acted in the college of Beauvais, at Paris. I suspect that there was likewise an English play on the story of Caesar before the time of Sh. CLARENDON: It is now known that a piece called Caesar's Fall was played in 1602 by Antony Munday, Drayton, Webster, Middleton, and others, and it is probable that the Julius Caesar of Sh. may have appeared as early as 1601.

97. Capitol | MALONE: The erroneous notion that Julius Caesar was killed in the Capitol is as old as Chaucer. [See note on 'bodkin,' III, i, 76.] CLARENDON: The mistake is repeated in Julius Cæsar. Caesar was assassinated in the Curia Pompeii, near the theatre of Pompey in the Campus Martius.

99. brute | STEVENS: Sir John Harrington in his Metamorphosis of Ajax, 1596, has the same quibble. LAMB (iii, 94, ed. 1870): Among the distinguishing features of that wonderful character [Hamlet], one of the most interesting (yet painful) is that soreness of mind which makes him treat the intrusions of Pol. with harshness.

... These tokens of an unhinged mind ... are parts of his character, which to reconcile with an admiration of him, the most patient consideration of his situation is no more than necessary; they are what we forgive afterwards, and explain by the whole of his character, but at the time they are harsh and unpleasant. Yet such is the actor's necessity of giving strong blows to the audience, that I have never seen a player in this character who did not exaggerate and strain to the utmost these ambiguous features,—these temporary deformities in the character. They make him express a vulgar scorn at Pol., which utterly degrades his gentility, and which no explanation can render palatable; they make him show contempt, and curl up the

And in Gaskoiague’s Greene Knight’s Farewell to Fancie: ‘To lie along in ladies lappes.’ Douce: We are not to conclude that this custom prevailed at the public theatres. 122. sables] WARBURTON: These words are an ironical apology for his mother's cheerful looks: two months was long enough in conscience to make any dead husband forgotten. The true reading is:—'fore I'll have a suit of sables, i.e. before. As much as to say—Let the devil wear black for me, I'll have none. JOHNSON: I cannot see why Hamlet, when he laid aside his dress of mourning, in a country where it was bitter cold, and the air nipping and eager, should not have a suit of sables. I suppose it is well enough known that the fur of sables is not black. CAPELL (Notes, &c., i, 136): It is scarce worth remarking, being a fact of such notoriety, that 'sables,' the furs so called, are the finery of most northern nations; so that Hamlet's saying amounts to a declaration, that he would leave off his blacks, since his father was so long dead. HEATH (p. 538): The sense seems to be: If this be the case, let the devil wear plain black; I'll get me a suit of sables, which, from their colour, will have the appearance indeed of mourning, but at the same time will indulge my appetite for finery and ornament to the utmost. FARMER: There is an equivocque here. In Massinger's Old Law, we have: 'A cunning grief That's only faced with sables for a show, But gaudy-hearted.' MALONE: By the Statute of Apparel, 24 Henry VIII, c. 13 (article furres), it is ordained that none under the degree of an earl may use sables. Bishop says, in his Blossoms, 1577, speaking of the extravagance of those times, that a thousand ducates were sometimes given for 'a face of sables.' CALDECOTT thinks that by the 'devil' Hamlet would have it understood that he meant his uncle. WIGHTWICK (The Critic, 1854, p. 317; cited in N. & Qu., 18 July, 1857) maintains that the contrast here is of color, not of material. 'Let the devil wear black; I'll wear a color of all others most oppugnant to sorrow.' And having found in Peacham some 'directions for painting or coloring of cuts and pictures,' wherein the definitions are given of certain colors, among them 'Sabell colour, i.e. flame-colour,' he infers that Ham. here says, 'I'll have a suit of sabell,' i.e. of flame color. 'A misspelling,' he adds, 'has produced all the previous confusion about this passage, and we may reasonably conclude that a different pronunciation distinguished the sable meaning black, and sabell meaning flame color.' DELIUS: 'Sables' indicated that the period of mourning was over.

Dyce: Another correspondent in The Critic, 1854, p. 373, observes that 'sabell,' or 'sabelle,' is prop

ery a fawn-color a good deal heightened with red, and that the term came from the French 'couleur d'isabelle.'—According to the Dict. de l'Acad. Fr., 'isabelle' is a color 'entre le blanc et le jaune, mais dans lequel le jaune domine. Il se dit surtout du poil des chevaux.' STAUNTON, who thought that Warburton's emendation was possibly right, says that 'it is not at all improbable that in the scene before us Hamlet was intended to accompany these words with the action of flinging off his mourning cloak. WHITE thinks 'for,' of the QQQ, 'a trifling variation from the true text [viz. 'fore'] hardly to be called a corruption. HALLIWELL: Shakespeare's intention was most likely to make Ham. here speak incoherently. If this be not the case, some sort of meaning may be elicited in this way: 'nay, then let the devil wear black, for even I will have a suit of mourning; if I wear one, the devil himself may,' KNIGHTLEY [reading, 'I'll not have a suit,' &c.]: When the critics shall have proved, —which they have not done yet,—that a dress trimmed with sable was called 'a suit of sables,' I will grant that Hamlet did not mean mourning, and that the negative is not needful. ELZE (Sh. Jahrbuch, Bd. xi): The constraint between a suit of sables and a black mourning garment lies not in the color, but in the costliness and splendor of the material. In accordance with the immemorial biblical usage of mourning in sackcloth and ashes, mourning garments to this day are made of coarse and harsh material, whereas for the trimming of a suit of sable the most gorgeous and brilliant stuff was selected.

125. not thinking on] KNIGHT: He shall suffer being forgotten.

126. hobby-horse] WARBURTON: Amongst the country May-games there was a hobby-horse, which, when the puritanical humor of those times opposed and discredited these games, was brought by the poets and ballad-makers as an instance of the ridiculous zeal of the sectaries; from these ballads Ham. quotes a line or two. NARES: A small horse; also a personage belonging to the ancient morris-dance, when complete, and made, as Mr Bayes's troops are on the stage, by the figure of a horse fastened round the waist of a man, his own legs going through the body of the horse, and enabling him to walk, but concealed by a long foot-cloth; while false legs appeared where those of the man should be, at the sides of the horse. Latterly the hobby-horse was frequently omitted, which appears to have occasioned a popular ballad, in which was the line now quoted by Ham. It is also quoted in Love's Lab. III, i, 30. DUCY adds to this note of Nares's: Many readers will probably recollect the spirited description of the Hobby-horse in Scott's Monastery; but, since Mr Bayes's troops have been long banished from the stage, it may be necessary to mention here that they are part of the dramatis persona in the Duke of Buckingham's once-celebrated satirical play called The Rehearsal. COLLIER: A ballad seems to have been written on the omission of the Hobby-horse in May-games. * The Hamlet. The dumb-show enters.

Enter a King and a Queen very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King’s ears, and exit. The Queen returns: finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. hobby-horse is forgot,’ and ‘the hobby-horse is quite forgot,’ are phrases constantly occurring in old writers to denote some omission.

137. The dumb-show] Pyx: This appears to contain every circumstance of the murder of Hamlet’s father. Now there is no apparent reason why the Usurper should not be as much affected by this mute representation of his crimes as he is afterwards when the same action is accompanied by words. The subsequent conversation between Hamlet and Ophelia precludes the possibility of its having been a kind of direction to the players only. CALDECOTT: Since the usage of the time warranted, and, as it would seem, even demanded this dumb-show, how could it have been omitted? Hamlet, intent on ‘catching the conscience of the king,’ would naturally wish that his ‘mouse-trap’ should be doubly set; and could never be supposed willing to relinquish any one of those engines, the use of which custom had authorized. The King, in fact, takes alarm at the thought that the subject is to be afterward brought forward in plain terms in the play, and expresses his apprehension of ‘offence in that argument,’ of which he was already in possession; and at this, indeed, he ‘bleaches.’ KNIGHT: Mute exhibitions, during the time of Sh., and before and after, were often introduced to exhibit such circumstances as the limits of a play would not admit to be represented. We presume, however, that Sh. had here some stage authority for making the dumb-show represent the same action that is indicated in the dialogue. His dramatic object is [pointed out by Caldecott]. Hunter (ii, 249): To represent the story of a play in dumb-show when the play itself is going to be performed appears a most extraordinary mode of procedure, and nothing like it has been traced in the usages of the English theatre, or, I believe, in the theatres of the more polished nations of Europe. What approach nearest to it, and may by some be mistaken for it, are the Dumb Shows in Sackville’s Coriandus and Gascoign’s Jocasta. But whoever considers these shows attentively will perceive that they are something essentially different from the exhibition of the very action which is immediately to follow with the accompanying dialogue. They are, in fact, but so many moralizations, resembling the choruses of the Greek drama, the moral lessons being read in action, rather than in words. I do not recollect any other English play with a dumb-show even of this kind; and Ophelia’s questions, ‘What means this, my lord?’ and ‘Will he tell us what this show means?’ prove that shows such as these made no part of the common dramatic entertainments of England. [Gascoign’s instructions respecting the dumb-shows in Jocasta are here given, to show how utterly unlike they are to this in Hamlet.] No one has hitherto hit upon the true origin of the show in Hamlet. It seems that such strange and unsuitable anticipations were according to the common practice of the Danish theatre. I first became acquainted with this fact, which appears to explain what without it appears to carry absurdity as far as it will go, when reading an unpublished diary of the seventeenth century, the writer of which relates that about the close of the year 1688 there landed at Hull about six thousand Danish soldiers, who were dispersed in the neighboring towns. Some of them were quartered at the little town of Hatfield, near Doncaster, near to which the writer of the diary lived, who, having given some general account of their habits, proceeds thus:—"Many of them while they stayed here acted a play in their language, and they got a vast deal of money thereby. The design of it was Herod’s Tyranny, the Birth of Christ, and the Coming of the Wise Men. They built a stage in our large court-house, and acted the same thereon. I observed that all the postures were shown first, namely, the king on his throne, his servants standing about him; and then, the scenes being drawn, another posture came, the barbarous soldiers murdering the infants, and so on; and when they had run through all so, they then began to act both together. All which time they had plenty of all sorts of music of themselves, for [one] soldier played on one sort, and one another. I heard some of them say that some of these players belonged to the King of Denmark’s play-house, that was set a fire and burnt when most of the nobles were beholding a play several years ago." The writer of this diary was Abraham de la Pryme. Halliwell: I cannot say that I am satisfied with the explanation [given by Caldecott and Knight], although it is certainly ingenious. If the King had seen the dumb-show, he must have known that there was offence in it. Is it allowable to direct that the King and Queen should be whispering confidentially to each other during the dumb-show, and so escape a sight of it?

129. miching mallecho] HAMNER defines the first word as 'secret, covered, lying hid'; and the second as 'a wicked act, a piece of iniquity. Span. malhecho.' WARBURTON maintains that the phrase means: 'Lying in wait for the poisoner.' And that it should therefore read: 'miching Malhecho,' and so introduces it in his text. HARRLEY very properly points out that malhecho no more means a poisoner than the perpetrator of any other crime. GREY (ii, 296): Why may not Sh. have wrote miching Malheco, from Spenser's description of him, Fairy Queene, iii, cantos 9, 10? FARMER (cited by Steevens): Were not these obscure words originally: ‘This is mimicking Malheco,' a private gloss by a friend on the margin of the MS Hamlet, and thence ignorantly received into the text? HEATH: To mich is a word still in common use in the western part of this island, and signifies, to lurk, to do mischief, under a fair external appearance. CAPELL (Notes, i, 136): This is said of the person of the Poisoner in the Dumb Show, a representative of the King, who was a man of mean figure (see III, iv, 64), and is therefore compared by the speaker to the character called Iniquity, in the ancient moralities, whose figure (it is like) was the same, an ill-looking, munching animal. MALONE: In Norfolk michers signify pilfers. The signification of miching in the present passage may be ascertained by a passage in Decker's Wonderful Yearre, 1603: 'Those that could shift for a time,—went most bitterly miching and muffed, up and downe, with rue and wormwood stuff into their eyes and nostrills.' See also Florio, Accipinar: 'To mich, to shrug or sneake in some corner.' CALDECOTT: 'Mychyn or stelyn pyuely.'—Prompt. Parv. KNIGHT: The skulking crime pointed out in the Dumb Show is, in one sense of Hamlet's wild phrase, miching malhecho; his own secret purpose from which mischief will ensue, is miching mallecho, in another sense;—in either case 'it means mischief.' MAGGIN (Fraser's Maga, Dec. 1839): In the Qq we find the traces of the true reading: mucho malhecho, much mischief. DYCE (Gloss.): 'Malhecho. . . . An evil action, an indecent and indecorous behaviour; malefaction.'—Connelly's Span. and Engl. Dict., Madrid. Compare: 'Tho. Be humble, Thou man of malhecho, or thou diest.'—Shirley's Gentleman of Venice; Works, vol. v, p. 52. Maginn's alteration is doubtless wrong. KNIGHTLEY did not think so; he adopted it. CLARENDON: Minshew (The Guide into Tongues) gives, 'To Miche, or secretly to hide himself out of the way, as Truants doe from schoole.' MACKAY (Athenaum, 16 Oct. 1875) says that it is to the wooing of the Queen by the Poisoner that Ham. refers as meaning mischief, not to the murder; in the latter the mischief is past, in the former it is to come. This is the clue which reveals the HALLIWELL: These posies were necessarily brief, e.g. 'I cannot show, the love I O'; 'God above, increase our love;' 'God's blessing be, with thee and me;' 'Let love abide, till death divide.' These are from rings of the Shakespearian period. CLARENDON: See Fairholt's Costume in England, p. 568.

155. distrust] Delius: That is, I am distrustful on your account. Compare fear me not,' I, iii, 51.
156. Johnson: [After the line in the Qq] a line seems to have been lost, which should have rhymed with 'love.' Stevens: Perhaps a triplet was designed, and then instead of 'love' we should read lust. Malone: Perhaps the words omitted might have been of this import, 'Either none they feel, or am excess approve.' Knight: There can be no doubt that the line from the Qq should be struck out, it being superseded by line 157. Cambridge Editors: As the line in the Qq occurs at the top of the page, the omission [conjectured by Johnson, Jennens, and others] is more likely to have been caused by a line having dropped out at the foot of the previous page. The Quarto probably gives us the author's first thought, incomplete, as well as the lines he finally adopted, as they stand in the Folio. The thought will hardly bear to be expanded over four lines. Tschirschwitz retains the line from the Qq, and in order to do so 'without hesitation' supplies the missing phrase thus:
'Either none at all or one man all above; And women's fear,' &c.
For women's fear and love holds quantity,
In neither aught, or in extremity.
Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know,
And as my love is sized, my fear is so;
Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear,
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

178-203. Sievers (Hamlet, p. 142, Leipzig, 1831) was, I believe, the first to point out the dozen or sixteen lines which Ham. had promised to insert in the play; and he supposed them to be lines 243-248, but Mr and Mrs Cowden Clarke, in their ed., believe that they are to be found in the present passage; because: the diction is different from the remainder of the dialogue, and is signally like Hamlet's own argumentative mode. 'This world is not for aye,' the thoughts upon the fluctuations of 'love' and
'fortune,' and the final reflection upon the contrary current of 'our wills and fates,' with the overthrow of our 'devices,' and the ultimate diversity between our intentions and their ends,' are as if proceeding from the Prince himself. His motive in writing these additional lines for insertion, and getting the player to deliver them, we take to be a desire that they shall serve to divert attention from the special passages directed at the King, and to make these latter seem less pointed. We have fancied that this is Shakespeare's intention, because of the emphatic variation in the style just here. Observe how very different are the mythological allusions to 'Phoebus,' 'Neptune,' &c., and the stiff inversions of 'about the world have times twelve thirties been,' 'discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must,' &c.; and, moreover, obserr how exactly the couplet commencing the Player-King's speech, 'I do be-leave,' &c., and the couplet concluding it, 'So think thou wilt,' &c., would con-join were the intervening lines omitted. To the same effect Tschirschwitz, who finds in lines 194-199 an allusion to Ros. and Guild; see II, ii, 346-349.
[178-203. the dozen or sixteen lines.] discussion as to whether or not these were Hamlet's dozen or sixteen lines was started by a note from Furnivall in The Academy, 3 Jan. 1874, to the effect that both Seeley and himself, independently and without any knowledge of Clarke's note on the subject, had hit upon these lines as those written by Ham. The discussion is carried on in the pages of The New Sh. Soc. Trans. 1 Series, pt. ii. p.
465, and as it there takes up some thirty or more pages, a mere digest of it can be given here. Malleson contends that these are not the lines written by Ham. 1.
They do not apply to the King's character or position, but rather to Ham. himself.
2. There is nothing in them of the torrent, tempest, and whirlwind of passion that Ham. was so anxious should not be torn to tatters. And, lastly, there was one scene which Ham. tells Hor. is to be the test, during which he is to watch the King with every faculty of his being, while Ham. will do the same during one speech.
Beyond doubt the scene is where poison is poured into the Player-King's eat, and here, likewise, at the crisis of the plot is to be found the speech, viz. 'Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit,' &c., and this is Hamlet's addition to the play. Had the King not blenched, we should have had probably the rest of the dozen lines, which might have contained a hint of the Poisoner's next aim, the seduction to a sudden second marriage of the seeming-virtuous Queen. It was the success of this alteration or addition that Ham. declared would get him a fellowship in a cry of players, and this success was due to the 'talk of the poisoning,' and this 'talk of the poisoning' is found only in this speech of Lucianus. Seeley, on the other hand, believed that the dozen or sixteen lines were some of those which make up the long speech beginning 'I do believe you think what now you speak.' To avoid conjecture as much as possible, we must consider two characteristics which the inserted speech must necessarily have: 1. It must consist of some dozen or sixteen lines. 2. Being an insertion, it must be such a speech as can be removed without affecting the action of the play. Now, these two characteristics belong to this speech of the Player-King, and to it alone. It is exceptionally long, and the whole of it could not be spared, but it is quite easy to spare about a dozen or sixteen lines from the middle of it, and such a retrenchment would bring the speech to about the average length of the other speeches. There is no reason why Ham. should make his lines 'charge the King with murder, or to drive the moral of the play home to the King's conscience.' * The play might be trusted to do that; no speech could make the application plainer. It is impossible for the speech beginning 'Thoughts black,' &c., to be the inserted speech, because it satisfies none of the conditions. It is not a dozen or sixteen lines, but only six;
it is not an inserted speech, but belongs essentially to the action. It is also impossible to suppose exactly that it was broken off by the King's rising, for the six lines in question form only one sentence, and must therefore belong entirely to the play itself in its original form, unless the murder were to be done in dumb show, which nobody supposes. His uncle's guilt is by no means the absorbing topic of Hamlet's thoughts; it is an annoying subject that weighs upon his mind without interesting it, and his only desire is to postpone and keep at arm's length everything connected with it, and with his duty to punish it. His real feeling for his uncle is only contempt, as for a vulgar knave, whom there is no satisfaction in thinking about,—and it would be source of wonder if he should think about him enough to take the trouble to write a dozen or sixteen lines to make clear what was already as clear as the day. But the subject that really does fill Hamlet’s mind, to the exclusion of what ought to engage his attention more, is his mother, and she it is with whom these inserted lines deal. From what we know of Hamlet’s feelings she would be, a priori, the subject of his inserted speech. Furthermore, if the speech were about the murder, it would be of no help in the progress of the play, nothing would be revealed to us by it. Whereas, if the speech dealt with the mother, it would be a broad hint to us not to trust Hamlet’s professions, and that the experiment of the play, with all its parade of ingenuity and of vengeance to follow, is a mere blind by which Ham. hides both from himself and Hor. that he does not intend to act at all, but will go on for ever brooding over the frailty of his mother and of all woman-kind. To this MALLESON rejoins: Ham. never says he has written a passage of so many lines, but that he intended to write some uncertain number, a dozen or sixteen. When he sat down with the play before him, he may have written twenty or twenty-six, and indeed, if the Player-King’s speech be accepted as partly Hamlet’s, all of it might be claimed for him except the first two and the last two lines, which, omitting the intervening twenty-six, go fairly together. There is no reason why the inserted lines must be such as can be removed without affecting the play; may not Ham. have substituted his lines for those which he struck out? If lines 178–203 were made, as Seeley contends, to catch the conscience of the Queen, there appears to be in them when closely analyzed nothing with any special reference to her, and accordingly she is perfectly unmoved by them; her response, when appealed to by Hamlet as to how she likes the play, betokens perfect self-possession. Afterwards, to be sure, she is thrown into ‘most great affliction of spirit,’ but it is entirely on her husband’s account,—as far as she was concerned, this speech was pointless. Grant that the plot of the play, by itself, sufficiently emphasized the King’s guilt, there is nothing unnatural in Hamlet’s wishing to make assurance doubly sure. In Seeley’s final remarks he admitted that Hamlet’s instructions to the Player suggest a speech that is in some sense passionate, but that in reality Ham. takes the occasion of a particular speech to give a general lecture on elocution, or on the general way in which a passion should be expressed. And these lines, which may appear tame to us, may have borne a much more intense feeling to Ham. The insertion is introduced to tell us something about Ham. that we should not otherwise have known. Its object was not to catch the conscience of the Queen, but to give us an additional insight into the dreamy, unpractical character of Ham. He had been from the first brooding over his mother’s conduct, and the play offers him an opportunity to relieve his feelings; the lines may not produce much effect upon her,—he knows how unimpressionable she is,—but his object will be gained if he only writes them. FURNIVALL sums up: Technically, Seeley’s position is very strong, but ‘on the merits’ he breaks down,—he has a capital case at Law, but none in Equity. I cannot resist Malleon’s argument, that Hamlet’s inserted speech is the one speech in which he tells Hor. the King’s guilt is to unkennel itself. But I hold very strongly that Lucianus’s speech is not the speech, and that, in fact, the speech is not in the printed play. Either the King’s conscience was more quickly stung than Ham. anticipated, and so the written speech was never needed; or (as Mr Matthew has suggested) Sh. contented himself with showing us, or letting us assume, that Ham. altered the play, and put his ‘dozen or sixteen lines’ into action instead of words; if he had not modified the play, what credit could he have claimed for himself as a play-writer or adapter. The inconsistency of Shakespeare's having made Ham. first talk so much about inserting a speech, and then leaving it out after all, is what one might fairly expect in the recast Hamlet after its other startling inconsistencies, e.g. Hamlet's age and Ophelia's suicide. What can it matter whether an actual speech of a dozen or sixteen lines, though often announce, be really in the play or not? Simpson calls attention to the fact that just as the historical drama takes for granted those events which are made known by previous allusions, so the sub-play generally omits all those details which have been previously described or alluded to. Thus in Mid. N. D., we have both the play as presented before Theseus and a rehearsal of it. The lines rehearsed are different from any in the actual play. 'Looking at the practice of the time and at the previous likelihoods of the case, I see no reason whatever for expecting to find that Sh. would have put into the sub-play the dozen lines that he makes Ham. promise.' Bathurst (p. 70) says that he sees 'no symptoms of the lines which Ham. was to insert.' Gervinus (2te Band, p. 102, 3te Auflage) believes that Sh. meant the passage from line 177 to 187 to apply to Ham. 'Indeed, Gonzago acted the part of Hamlet's father. Ham. as well as his mother must have a taste of "wormwood."' My friend Dr Ingleby has kindly sent me extracts from a Paper on this subject, which is announced for reading to the New Shakspere Society, 9 February, 1877. In these extracts Dr Ingleby dissents from all that has been assumed heretofore on this subject in that Society's Transactions, and maintains his own view, very briefly thus: The court-play is but a part of Hamlet; that Ham. writes no speech at all, whether of six, twelve, or sixteen lines, nor recites such a speech; Sh. simply wrote the entire play, not writing any additions in person to Hamlet, still less writing an addition to a play which he had previously written in the character of the author of an Italian morality. To trace into its issues every suggestion in the play, so that the event should justify the hint, is to consider too curiously.' A drama is a work of art, a contrivance for imposing upon the spectator, causing him to take no account of actual time, place, and circumstance, making him almost forget that he is in a play-house. In real life a Hamlet might compose and insert a few lines to add point and force to an ordeal, like that of the court-play, to which the fictitious Hamlet subjects the supposed criminal; and if we had the play before us, we might detect the insertion by means of our various tests of metre, phraseology, &c. If we failed to discover the added lines, the fault is ours; the lines would be there. Now to suppose that Sh. in composing Hamlet followed out the exact course that a real living prince would have followed, is to impute to him a lack of the simplest art of the playwright, and a neglect of the artifices which the drama places at his command. Whereas, Shakespeare's procedure was probably this: In the course of enlarging the first sketch of his Hamlet he conceived the design of making it a vehicle for the highest possible instruction in the art of elocution. The play-scene was already devised, and he had, therefore, to introduce the Players as arriving at Elsinore. Here was the chance he wanted. He would make Ham. instruct the Player, and through him all players, how to act. But how was this to be brought about? Ham. could hardly be supposed to know by heart the roles of a strolling player. Wherefore, Sh. makes Ham. speak as if he had already recited to the Player a speech of his own composition, and hereupon give his instructions. Thus, having found or made the occasion, Sh. had to prepare the audience for the supposed recitation, and this was done by representing Ham. at a former interview imparting to the old Player his intention of writing 'a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines' (i.e. a speech of several lines) for insertion in The Murder of Gonzago. But all the while Shakespeare's object (kept wholly out of view) was to prepare the audience for his own lesson (voce Hamleti) on elocution. It is a rule of dramatic art that, a dramatic expedient not essential to the plot, introduced for a collateral object, is to be left out of consideration as soon as that object is attained. As soon, therefore, as Ham. has given the old Player his lesson, the dramatic need of the 'dozen or sixteen lines' is satisfied, and we have no further concern with them. The suggestion, however, served (1) to prepare the way for Hamlet's advice; (2) to suggest the possibility, vague to the last degree, that Ham. had the old play touched and tinkered to suit his purpose more completely. The phrase, 'some dozen or sixteen,' does not mean what it says; it is even more indefinite than 'ten or a dozen,' or 'a dozen or fourteen,' which Mrs Quickly uses in Hem. V: II, i; the prefix 'some' adds vagueness to what was vague already. These lines, by the very nature of the case, can never have been in Hamlet. [It is to task the credulity of an audience too severely to represent the possibility of Hamlet's finding an old play exactly fitted to Claudius's crime, not only in the plot, but in all the accessories, even to a single speech which should tempt the criminal to the very quick. In order, therefore, to give an air of probability to what every one would feel to be thus highly improbable, Sh. represents Ham. as adapting an old play to his present needs by inserting in it some pointed lines. Not that such lines were actually inserted, but, mindful of this proposal of Hamlet's, the spectator is prepared to listen to a play which is to unkenne the King's occulted guilt in a certain speech; the verisimilitude of all the circumstances is thus maintained. No matter how direct or pointed the allusion to the King's guilt may be, we accept it all, secure under Shakespeare's promise that the play shall be made to hit Claudius fatally. And we hear the fulfilment of this promise in Hamlet's cry of exultation over the success of his attempt at play-writing. The discussion, therefore, that has arisen over these 'dozen or sixteen lines' is a tribute to Shakespeare's consummate art. Ingleby, I think, is right in maintaining that Sh. did not first write The Murder of Gonzago, and then insert in it certain lines, as though written by Hamlet. And Sievers, the Clarkes, Malleson, and others are also right, I think, in believing that certain lines of the court-play are especially applicable to Claudius, and which we may imagine are those that Ham. told the Player he would give him. It is the very impression which, I think, Sh. wished to convey. Ed.]

220. protests] CORSON: The familiar 'protest' is better here than 'doth protest.'

222. argument] See notes on line 127, where various attempts are made to explain what HUNTER calls 'the oversight' in this question of the King's.
Ham. No, no; they do but jest, poison in jest; no offence 't the world.

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna; Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista; you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work; but what o' that? your Majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

234. offence] DELIUS: Here again, as before in I, v, 137, this word is used in a double sense. The King means a moral 'offence,' and Hamlet means a physical 'offence,' or crime.
236. Tropically] CALDECOTT: Figuratively, by a trope or turn we give things. HUNTER (ii, 282): Tropically of Q, is an unmeaning word, except that we may see a faint shade of meaning in the play being a figurative representation of an actual deed, and this, combined with the opportunity of playing on the word trap, is the true reason that we meet with this word thus oddly introduced.
238. Vienna] COLLIER: The Guiana of Q, perhaps arose from the shorthand-writer having misheard the name.
239. duke's] HUNTER (ii, 252): Q, explains why everywhere else he is a king. The character was a duke throughout, as the play was originally written, and when king was to be substituted for duke, this passage remained by some accident uncorrected. WALKER (Crit. ii, 281) shows by many instances that king, duke, and count were confounded in sense, and that to the poet they were one and the same, all involving alike the idea of sovereign power; and thus might easily be confounded with each other in the memory.
240. Baptista] JOHNSON: In Italian, I think, the name always of a man. RITSON: I believe it is never used singly, but compounded with Gian (for Giovanni), and meaning, of course, John the Baptist. HUNTER (ii, 252): I have seen a few instances in which the name was borne by women in England. Sh. was not solicitous about it. It had a feminine termination; that was enough.
243. wince] STEEVES: A proverb. Thus, in Damon and Pythias, 1582; 'I know the gall'd horse will soonest wince.' CLARENDEL: See Lyly's Euphues, p. 119 (ed. Arber): 'For well I know none will winch except she be gawilded.' See Mother Bombie, I, iii.

'must be to be ever busie, and mistake away the bottles and cans, before they be half drunk off.' Steevens: Again, in Jonson's Masque of Augurs: 'To mistake six torches from the chandery, and give them one.' Again, in The Elder Brother of Fletcher: 'I fear he will persuade me to mistake him.' Again, in Chrestoleros; Seven Books of Epigrams, written by T. B. [Thomas Bastard], 1598, lib. vii, epig. xviii: '——For nose that see'th her face and making, Will judge her storne, but by mistaking.' Again, in Questions of Profitable and Pleasant Concernings, 1594: 'Better I were now and then to suffer his remisse mother to mistake a quarter or two of corne.' Tollot: The meaning is: 'You do amiss for yourselves to take husbands for the worse. You should take them only for the better.' Caldecott: In these very terms of confusion and contradiction it is that you make up what you call your solemn contract of marriage. For 'mistake'—wrongly judged of, see Hen. VIII: III, 1, 101. Singer: Hamlet puts upon the word mistake: 'So you mistake, or take your husbands amiss for better and worse.' The word was often thus misused for anything done wrongfully, and even for privy stealing.

241. Poç.] Dyce: Need I observe that, in Shakespeare's time, this imprecation undoubtedly referred to the small-pox?

242. revenge?] Collier: This perhaps was a quotation from some other play in Hamlet's memory. Dyce (Remarks, &c., p. 215): Ham. seems to mean: 'Begin without more delay; for the raven, prescient of the deed, is already croaking, and, as it were, calling out for the revenge which will ensue.' Simpson (The Academy, 19 Dec. '74): Ham. rolls into one two lines of an old familiar play: The True Tragedy of Richard the Third (p. 61, Sh. Soc. Reprint). The king is describing the terrors of his conscience: 'Methinks their ghosts comes gaping for revenge Whom I have slain in reaching for a crown; and of the two lines which follow, Hamlet's speech is a satirical condensation: 'The screeking raven sits croking for revenge Whole herds of beasts comes bellowing for revenge.'

263. feathers] MALONE: It appears from Decker's Gut's Hornbooke that feathers were much worn on the stage in Shakespeare's time.

264. turn Turk] STEEVENS: See Much Ado, III, iv. 57; and, in Greene's Tq Quoque, 1614: 'This it is to turn Turk, from an absolute and most compleat gentleman, to a most absurd, ridiculous, and fond lover.' It means no more than to change condition fantastically. CALDECOTT: To undergo a total and ruinous change.

265. Provincial] WARTON: Hamlet means the roses of Provence, a beautiful species; therefore read Provincial [CAPELL, MALONE, and STEEVENS adopted this reading] or Provençal. DOUCE: Change is unnecessary. There is no evidence that Provence was ever remarkable for its roses; whereas, Provins, about forty miles from Paris, was formerly very celebrated for the growth of this flower, which, according to tradition, was imported into that country from Syria by a Count de Brie. JOHNSON: When shoe-strings were worn they were covered, where they met in the middle, by a ribbon gathered in the form of a rose. CLARENDON: Cotgrave gives both localities: 'Rose de Provence. The Provinc Rose, the double Damask Rose;' and 'Rose de Provins. The ordinarie double red Rose.' In either case it was a large rose. The Province or Damask Rose was probably the better known. Gerarde, in his Herbal, says that the damask rose is called by some 'Rosa provincialis.' Fair-olt (Costume in England, p. 238) quotes from Friar Bacon's Prophecy, 1604: When roses in the gardens grew, And not in ribbons on a shoe: Now ribbon roses take such place, That garden roses want their grace.' At p. 579 he gives several instances of the extravagances to which this fashion led. Tischischwitz wildly prose and adopts 'provisional' for the following reason: The passing strangeness of the assumption that actors procured fresh (?) roses from the town of Provins occurred neither to Douce nor to the critics who follow him. It is probable that nothing more than parti-colored paper was used as a substitute.' Hence, 'Since Provincial yields no meaning, it is clear that Sh. here wrote provisional (like the Italian provisionale), that is, a pair of makeshift-roses.'

265. razed] THEOBALD: I once suspected that we ought to read 'raised shoes.' It was the known custom of the tragedians of old, that they might nearer resemble the heroes they personated, to make themselves as tall in stature as they possibly could. But perhaps it may have been 'rayed shoes,' that is, striped, spangled, STEEVENS: 'Razed shoes' may mean 'slashed shoes, i.e. with cuts or openings in them.' Sh. might have written 'raised shoes,' i.e. shoes with high heels. Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, 1595, has a chapter on corked shoes, 'which,' he says, 'bear them up two inches or more from the ground, &c., some of red, blacke, &c., rased, carrsed, cut, and stitched,' &c. To rose and to race alike signify to streak. See Markham's Country Farm: '—baking them all (i.e. wafer cakes) together between two irons, having within them many raced and checkered draughts after the manner of small squares. HUNTER (ii, 254) cites from Pencham, The Truth of Our Times, 1638, to show that gallants sometimes paid thirty pounds for a pair of shoe-ties, called roses. COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) reads rais'd, which is possibly right. Burbage, being short, may have worn 'rais'd shoes,' but still it seems unlikely that he would thus be made to advert to his own deficiency.

STAINTON: If 'razed' be right, it must mean slashed or opened shoes. CLARENDON: In Randle Holme's Academy of Armory, bk. iii, ch. i, p. 14, we find: 'Pinned or raised Shoos, have the over leathers grain part cut into Roses, or other devices.'

265. cry] WARBURTON: 'Allusion to a pack of hounds,' which, says STEEVENS, was formerly called a cry. Here it means a troop or company. See Cor. IV, vi, 168, and III, iii, 120. CLARENDON: Compare Cotgrave: 'Meute: f. A kennel, or cry of hounds.'

267. share] MALONE: The actors in Shakespeare's time had not annual salaries as at present. The whole receipts of each theatre were divided into shares, of which the proprietors of the theatre, or housekeepers, as they were called, had some: and each actor had one or more shares, or part of a share, according to his merit. See Var. 1821, iii, [p. 171. Also COLIER'S Annals of the Stage, iii, p. 429.] CLARENDON: In Henslowe's Diary (p. 5) is a memorandum of £15 being lent to Francis Henslowe for a share with the Queen's players, and [p. 8, three years afterwards, in 1596] £9 for a half share with another company. [In HALLIWELL's very valuable Illustrations of the Life of Shakespeare, 1874, pp. 85-91, certain petitions and answers are reprinted, that were filed in 1633, in the Lord Chamberlain's office, and although in date they are after Shakespeare's day, they nevertheless throw great light on the early financial management of the Globe and Blackfriars theatres, and of the value of the shares in them. The substance of one of these petitions, which shows us what the housekeepers were, and that they and the actors were not always in accord, is as follows: 'Robert Benefield, Eyillard Swanston, and Thomas Pollard doe further humbly represent unto your Lordship. That the housekeepers beeing but six in number, vizz., Mr. Cutbert Burbadge, Mrs. Condall, Mr. Shankes, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Lowen and Mr. Robinson (in the right of his wife), have amongst them the full moyety of all the galleries and boxes in both houses, and of the tiring-house dores at the Globe. That the actors have the other moyety, with the outer dores; but in regard the actors are halfe as many, vizz., nine in number, their shares fall shorter and are a great deale lesse then the housekeepers; and yet, notwithstanding out of those lesser shares the sayd actors defray all charges of the house whatsoever, vizz., wages to hired men and boyes, musicke, lightes, &c., amounting to 900 or 1000 l. per annum or thereabouts, beeing 3 l. a day one day with another; besides the extraordinary charge which the sayd actors are wholly at for apparell and poete, &c. Whereas the sayd housekeepers out of all their gains have not till Lady Day last payd above 65 l. per annum rent for both houses, towards which they rayse betweene 20 and 30 l. per annum from the tap houses and a tenement and a garden belonging to the premises, &c., and are at noe other charges whatsoever, excepting the ordinary reparations of the houses. Soe that upon a medium made of the gaynes of the housekeepers and those of the actors one day with another throughout the yeere, the petitioners will make it apparent that when some of the hous-

keeper's share 12s. a day at the Globe, the actors share not above 3s. And then what those gaine that are both actors and housekeepers, and have their shares in both, your Lordship will easily judge, and thereby finde the modesty of the petitioners suite, who desire onely to buy for their money one part a piece from such three of the sayd housekeepers as are fittest to spare them, both in respect of desert and otherwise, viz., Mr. Shankes, one part of his three, &c. Mr John Shankes not unnaturally remonstrated, and it is from his answer that we learn the value of a 'share,' not only of a 'housekeeper,' but in a 'cry of players;' he states that 'he did buy [of William Hemings] one part hee had in the Blackfriers for about six yeere then to come at the yeerly rent of 6l. 5s., and another part hee then had in the Globe for about two yeeres to come, and payd him for the same two partes in ready moneys 156l.

... about eleven months since, the sayd William Hemings, offering to sell unto your suppliand the remaining partes hee then had, viz., one in the Blackfriers, wherein hee had then about five yeerees to come, and two in the Globe, wherein hee had then but one yeere to come, your suppliand likewise bought the same, and pay'd for them in ready moneys more 350l., all which moneys so disbursed by your suppliand amounted to 506l., &c. Shankes, who had been one of Shakespeare's fellow-actors, makes an appeal ad misericordiam as 'beeing an old man in this quality, [see Ham. II, ii, 333 and 417], and then states that 'Mr. Swanston one of them who is most violent in this busines,' 'be hath further had and receaved this last yeere above 34l. for the profit of a third parte of one parte in the Blackfriers which hee bought for 20l.' Nor did 'Cuthbert Burbadge and Winifred his brothers wife, and William his sonne' submit any more quietly than John Shankes to be 'trampled upon,' as they term it, and their answer is a Shakespearian discovery so recent and so interesting not only in its familiar allusion to Shakespeare as a 'deserving man,' but also in its reference to the Children of the Queen's Chapel, that the following extract will not be deemed too long nor out of place: 'The father of us, Cuthbert and Richard Burbadge, was the first builder of playhouses and was himselfe in his younger yeeres a player. The Theater hee built [the first ever built in England, in 1576. Ed.] with many hundred pounds taken up at interest. The players that lived in those first times had onely the profits arising from the dores, but now the players receave all the comings in at the dores to themselves and halfe the galleries from the housekeepers. Hee built this house upon leased ground, by which means the landlord and hee had a great suite in law, and, by his death, the like troubles fell on us, his sonnes; wee then bethougth us of altering from thence, and at like expence built the Globe, with more summes of money taken up at interest, which lay heavy on us many yeerees; and to ourselves wee joined those deserving men, Shakspeare, Hemings, Condall, Philips and others, partners in the profitts of that they call the House, but makinge the leases for twenty-one yeerees hath beene the destruction of ourselves and others for they dyeing at the expiration of three or foure yeerees of their lease, the subsequent yeerees became dissolved to strangers... Thus, Right Honorable, as concerning the Globe, where wee ourselves are but lessees. Now for the Blackfriers, that is our inheritance, our father purchased it at extreme rates, and made it into a playhouse with great charge and troble; which after was leased out to one Evans that first sett up the boyes commonly called the Queens Majesties Children of the Chappell. In process of time, the boyes growing up to bee men, which were Underwood, Field, Osiler, and were taken to strengthen the Kings service; and the

268. I] MALONE: It should be, I think,—'A whole one;—say,—' [Most improperly—Dyce, Gloss.]. STEEVENS: It means no more than, 'I think myself entitled to a whole one.' CALDECOTT: 'A whole one, say I.' STAUNTON: Malone's emendation will strike many as the more likely reading. WHITE thinks it strange that modern editions should retain 'I' of Qqff. STRATMANN agrees with Malone.

269-271. Dyce: Another quotation, surely; 'pajock,' of course, excepted.

271. Jove] HUDSON: The meaning is, that Denmark was robbed of a king who had the majesty of Jove.

272. pajock] POPE: This alludes to the fable of the birds choosing a king; instead of the eagle, a peacock. THEOBALD (Sh. Restored, p. 94) proposed: First, meacock, a 'cravenly' bird, and metaphorically a dastardly effeminate fellow; Second, paddock, a toad; Third, paiock, a ravenous kite, a devourer of the state and people. Of these three Theobald repeated only the second in his edition, with the note: 'I think Ham. is setting his father's and uncle's characters in contrast to each other; and means to say, that by his father's death the state was stripped of a godlike monarch, and that now in his stead reigned the most despicable poisonous animal that could be; a mere paddock or toad.' This word I take to be of Hamlet's own substituting. The verses repeated, seem to be from some old ballad, in which rhyme being necessary, I doubt not but the last verse ran thus: A very, very—ass. FARMER: A peacock seems proverbial for a fool. Thus, Gascoigne, in his Weeds: 'A thief, a cowarde, and a peacock foole.' MALONE: Sh. means that the King struts about with a false pomp, to which he has no right. See Florio, 1598: 'Farness-meggiare. To let up and down fondly gazing upon himself, as a peacock doth.' MARTINUS SCRIBELLUS (Explanations, &c., Edinburgh, 1814): The original word sounded to me like a foreign word introduced into our language. Following out this hint, if thou wilt look, reader, into any Italian Dictionary, thou wilt see that the word baisco means a piece of money, of about three farthings value, and there was a silver coin of that value in Queen Elizabeth's time, which seemed to figure in Shakespeare's imagination as something abundantly ridiculous. See King John, I.
i, 143. When Hamlet, therefore, calls the King a pajock, he merely means to use one of the most contemptuous expressions which occurred to him in the moment; so that I would not alter the text. Dyce: 'Pajock' is certainly equivalent to peacock. I have often heard the lower classes in the north of Scotland call the peacock — the 'peanock,' and their almost invariable name for the turkey-cock is 'bubbly-jock.' HALLIWELL quotes Dyce, and adds: there can be little doubt but that the word in the text is a similarly corrupted form. ELZE: If paddock be inadmissible, bowcock may be suggested. See Hen. V.: IV, i, 44; and Twelfth Night, III, iv, 125. EDEN WARWICK (N. & Qu., 7 Dec. '61), finding from Bunsen's Egypt's Place, &c. that the word Patakei, the name of the ancient Phcenician gods, still survives at the present day in Rome, applied to a coin with a hideous, worn-out impression, which is called a 'Patacco,' suggested that 'pajocke' is a misprint for patakie. Leo (N. & Qu., Jan. 21, '65): 'Hamlet means ass, and does not intend to weaken what he means by supplying it by such an innocent word as "peacock," "paddock," &c. He says, "A very, very ... ," and then he says nothing more, but he means in a rather characteristic way; and so gives to the hearer the opportunity to supply by rhyming what he has left unsaid. And so I suppose the word in question did not belong to the verse, but was a stage-direction, which I should like to understand as—"hiccups."' 'A very, very ... [hiccup].' [Can this be surpassed? Ed.] LATHAM (N. & Q., 22 Aug. '71) suggests Polack. In Hamlet Danicism may be expected, and this word, besides its primary, national meaning, had, owing to the ill feeling between the Poles and the Danes, a secondary meaning equivalent to blackguard or Philistine. T. McGrath (N. & Qu., 23 Sept. '71) suggests paj-och, i.e. paj, equivalent to patch, a contemptuous fellow, and -och, diminutive. Hence 'pajock' or patchock, a paltry clown; and cites Spenser, A View of the present State of Ireland, p. 636, Globe ed. — 'Some in Leinster ... are degenerate, and growen to be as very patchockes as the wild Irish.' KRIGHTLEY (Expositor, 293): I agree with Theobald, as the King is afterwards called a 'paddock,' and there is probably an allusion to the poisoning. Tschirschwitz: The word is Polish, pajuk, pajok, and means a servant, a doorkeeper, like hajduk. I have not been able to discover at what period Hajducks were introduced into European courts, but it is quite possible that it took place towards the close of the sixteenth century. ANONYMOUS (New Shakespearean Interpretations, Edin. Rev. Oct. 1872): All agree that the various spellings in the QkF indicate one word: peacock; in discussing this passage critics have forgotten the character that the peacock held in the natural history, as well as in the popular belief, of the time. The most popular manual of natural history in Shakespeare's day gives the following account: 'And the peacock is a bird that loveth not his young, for the male searcheth out the female, and seeketh out her eggs for to break them, that he may so occupy him the more in his lecherie. And the female dreadeth that, and hideth busily her eggs, lest the peacock might soon find them. And Aristotle sayth that the peacock hath an unsteadfast and evill shapen head, as it were the head of a serpent, and with a crest. And he hath a simple pace, and a small necke, and areared, and a blew breast, and a tail ful of beauty, and he hath the foulest feet and riveled ... and he hath an horrible voice. And as one sayeth, he hath a voice of a feend, the head of a serpent, and the pace of a theefe. And Plinius sayth that the peacock hath enioio to man's profit, and swallowing his owne durt: for it is full medicinable, but it is seldom found.' This last is a curiously dark touch of malevolence. 'There has been no change in my opinion:—I think as ill of you as I did.' gleam of Hamlet's old regard for his schoolfellows shines out here for a moment; but it fades again instantly, and he ends with a jesting allusion to the catechism,—intended to avow, rather than to conceal, his feeling that he is using his tongue in a way forbidden, as much as picking and stealing are to his hands.

320. pickers and stealers] JOHNSON: Hands. WHALLEY: The phrase is taken from our church catechism, where the catechumen, in his duty to his neighbor, is taught to keep his hands from picking and stealing. NARES: Examples are common of swearing by the fingers, called in cast phrase, 'the ten bones.' See 2 Hen. VII: I, iii, 193. CALDESOCK: 'Pykare or lytyte theft.'—Prompt. Farrow. CLARENCE: 'By this hand!' is a frequent form of asseveration. See Temp. III, ii, 56, 78; Mar. ofVen. V, i, 161.

321. your cause] CLARENCE: The cause of your disorder. So 'your sovereignty of reason,' in I, iv, 73.

327. proverb] MALONE: The remainder of this old proverb is preserved in Whetstone's Promes and Cassandra, 1578: 'Whilst grass doth grow, oft serves the seely steede.' Again, in The Paradise of Dainty Devices, 1578: 'To whom of old this proverb well it serves, While grass doth growe, the silly horse he starves.' Ham. means to intimate, that whilst he is waiting for the succession to the throne of Denmark, he may himself be taken off by death.

329. recorders] DYCIE: The change from the plural of the Qg to the singular of the FY I have not the slightest doubt we must attribute to the 'company,' who were obliged to be economical both of persons and properties. A single recorder, why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you 330 would drive me into a toil?

indeed, suffices for the mere business of this scene; but the alteration is quite at variance with what precedes in line 280.

339. recorders] CHAPPELL (Popular Music of the 'Olden Time,' p. 246, and note): Old English musical instruments were commonly made of three or four different sizes, so that a player might take any of the four parts that were required to fill up the harmony. So Violins, Lutes, Recorders, Flutes, Shawms, &c., have been described by some writers in a manner which (to those unacquainted with this peculiarity) has appeared irreconcilable with other accounts. Sh. (in Hamlet) speaks of the Recorder as a little pipe, and says, in Mid. N. D., 'he hath played on his prologue like a child on a recorder;' but in an engraving of the instrument* it reaches from the lip to the knee of the performer; and among those left by Henry VIII were Recorders of box, oak, and ivory, great and small, two base Recorders of walnut, and one great base Recorder. Recorders and (English) Flutes are to outward appearance the same, although Lord Bacon in his Natural History, cent. iii, sec. 221, says the Recorder hath a less bore, and a greater above and below. The number of holes for the fingers is the same, and the scale, the compass, and the manner of playing, the same. Salter describes the recorder, from which the instrument derives its name, as situate in the upper part of it, i.e. between the hole below the mouth and the highest hole for the finger. He says, 'Of the kinds of music, vocal has always had the preference in esteem, and in consequence the Recorder, as approaching nearest to the sweet delightfulness of the voice, ought to have first place in opinion, as we see by the universal use of it confirmed.'
Ward, the military instrument-maker, informs me that he has seen 'old English flutes' with a hole bored through the side, in the upper part of the instrument, cov-cered with a thin piece of skin, like gold-beater's skin. I suppose this would give somewhat the effect of the quill or reed in the Hautboy, and that these were Recorders. Recorders were used for teaching birds to pipe.

339. To withdraw with you] CAPEL (Notes, i, 138): That is, to have done with you, draw towards an end with you; and he singles out Guilt, as of a darker and more treacherous temper than the other. [Capell marks the phrase as an Aside.] M. MASON: These words were probably spoken to the Players, whom Ham. wished to get rid of. Read, therefore, 'So, withdraw you;' or 'So withdraw, will you?' STEEVENS: Here Malone added the stage-direction: [Taking Guildenstern aside.] But the foregoing obscure words may refer to some gesture which Guilt had used, and which at first was interpreted by Ham. into a signal for him to attend the speaker into another room. 'To withdraw with you?' (says he).
'Is that your meaning?' But finding his friends continue to move mysteriously about him, he adds, with some resentment, a question more easily intelligible.
CALDECOTT: The two royal emissaries at first only request that the Prince would vouchsafe them a word; and they then acquaint him with the King's rage, and the Queen's command to visit her. They then, by a waving of the hand, or some such signal, as the exclamation of Ham. denotes, intimate that he should remove to a

341. govern] Caldecott: One would almost suppose this word to be here technical, from the use made of it on this subject in Mid. N. D. V, i, 123.
342. thumb] Steevens attempts to justify the misprint of Q,Q3 by supposing that the umbre was 'the ancient name for that piece of movable brass at the end of a flute which is either raised or depressed by the finger.' In support, he adduces instances of the use of the words umbre, and umbrere, which, however, mean the visor of a helmet. Tollett supports the reading on practical grounds: if a recorder had a brass key like the German flute, we are to follow Q,Q3: for then the thumb could not govern the ventages; if, however, it had not a brass key, then the reading of the Fj must stand. Nares, in refutation, says that the brass key is more modern than the time of Sh.
343. eloquent] Corson: I feel a certain seriousness—that's hardly the word—about 'eloquent,' not in keeping; whereas, in the use of excellent there seems to be implied the idea that the music that can be got out of the little instrument is superior to what one would suspect. The word 'excellent' should be pronounced with a downward circumflex on 'ex,' imparting a patronizing tone.
344. stops] Malone: The sounds formed by stopping the holes. See line 17 of Induction to 2 Hen. IV. Sinner: Rather the mode of stopping those ventages to produce notes.
But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.—

God bless you, sir!

My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape of a camel?

Ducce: When 'Sblood' was struck out [of F], to be replaced by Why, the preceding word, 'speak,' was at the same time accidentally struck out. 'Speak' answers to 'discourse,' line 243.—Remarks, &c., p. 217.

Ducce (ii, 250): Here is a play on words and a double meaning. Ham. says, 'though you can vex me, you cannot impose on me; though you can stop the instrument, you cannot play on it.' Ducce (Glos.): Frets are stops of instruments of the lute or guitar kind; small lengths of 'wire on which the fingers press the strings in playing the Guitar.'—Busby's Dict. of Musical Terms, ed. iii.

The use of yet [as in Q.] as the correlative of 'though,' adds to the formalness, and takes away from the plain decisiveness, of the speech.

as it precludes approbation or silent admission of the moral taste discovered in this play by its author. It is, besides, dramatically improper; for, in the first place, his mother had done nothing to deserve it; it is not even insinuated against her that she was acquainted with the manner of her former husband's death. Her offence was marrying again too soon, and, in addition to this, that her second husband was brother to the first. In the next place, such a deed would not only delay the execution of the high behest of the Ghost, which is the main purpose of the drama, but would in all probability have entirely frustrated it; and Ham. cannot be supposed not to have foreseen that such would be the result. Ham. a matricide would have become instantly an object of universal odium. In fact, the truth cannot and ought not to be concealed that, popular as this play is, not in England only, but all the world over, there are parts in it which seem quite at variance with the ordinary modes of thinking of its author.

381. shent] STEEVES: To shend, is to reprove harshly, to treat with rough language. Henderson: 'Shent' means more than reproof. Ham. surely means
'however my mother may be hurt, wounded, or punished.'

382. seals] Warburton: Put them in execution. Knight: To make my say-

383. consent] Corson (p. 28): 'Consent' is not an imperative, but a subjunctive, and 'soul' a nominative, not a vocative. See Abbott, §§ 364, 365.

scheme for killing Ham. in England.

4. along] For instances of the omission of the verb of motion after 'along,' see

7. lunacies] Theobald: This unnecessary Alexandrine owe to the players.
Sh. wrote lunes, i.e. madness, frenzy. See Wint. Tale, II, ii, 30; Merry Wives, IV, ii, 22. Johnson: I take browses of the Qq to be, properly read, browes, which, I think, is a provincial word for perverse humours, which being not understood was changed to 'lunacies.' But of this I am not confident. Steevens suggested that perhaps Sh. designed a metaphor from horned cattle, whose powers of being dangerous increase with the growth of their brows! Henley improved on this, and maintained that the image under which the King apprehends danger from Ham. is that of a bull! 'which, in his frenzy, might not only gore, but push him from his throne.' Elze: It is not improbable that Sh. wrote either frowns or brains.

9. many many] Collier (ed. ii): The (MS) has 'very many,' thus setting right a manifest misprint of the Ff. [Adopted in the text by Collier (ed. ii) and Elze.]
Staunton: This expression, signifying numberless, should certainly be hyphenated, like too-too, few-few, most-most, &c. Clarendon: Compare 'little little,' Hen. V: IV, ii, 33.

13. noyance] Clarendon: Harm. Here used in a stronger sense than our modern annoyance. Spenser, however, Fairy Queen, I, i, 23, has it, with the weaker meaning, applied to the 'feeble stinges' of 'gnattes.'
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but like a gulf doth draw
What’s near it with it; it is a massy wheel,

Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone

King. Thanks, dear my lord.

[Exit Polonius.

Oh, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven; It hath the primal eldest curse upon't, A brother's murder! Pray can I not, Though inclination be as sharp as will;

27. Polonius] Coleridge: Polonius's volun teer obtrusion of himself into this business, while it is appropriate to his character, still itching after former importance, removes all likelihood that Ham. should suspect his presence, and prevents us from making his death injure Ham. in our opinion.

30. as you said] Morely: This was Polonius's own suggestion, which, counter-like, he ascribes to the King.

32. them] Clarendon: That is, mothers.

33. of vantage] Warburton: By some opportunity of secret observation. Abbott, § 165: 'Of ' here retains its original meaning of from; hence the words are equivalent to 'from the vantage-ground of concealment,'

38. murder] Theobald: Was a brother's murder the eldest curse? Surely, it was rather the crime that was the cause of this eldest curse. I have ventured at two supplemental syllables, as innocent in themselves, as necessary to the purposes for which they are introduced: 'That of a brother's murder.' Heath (p. 541): The defect in the measure is sufficiently accounted for by the break which divides the verse: 'A brother's murder' is in apposition, not to the curse, but to the offence. Walker (Crut. ii, 199): 'Read, for metre-sake, murderer.'

39. as will] Theobald: An ingenious gentleman started, at a heat, this very probable emendation: 'as 'twill.' Will signifying barely the determination of mind.

My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer but this twofold force,
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But oh, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? 'Forgive me my foul murder?'
That cannot be, since I am still possess'd

My crown, mine own ambition and my queen.

strong as the determination of my mind to perform it, yet my stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,' &c. [Hammer, Johnson, Heath, Keightley, adopted this conj. Ed.] WARRINGTON: 'As will' is rank nonsense. Read, 'as th' ill,' i. e. though my inclination makes me as restless and uneasy as my crime does. The line following proves it.
BOSWELL: The distinction between 'inclination' and 'will' is philosophically correct. I may will to do a thing because my understanding points it out to me as right, although I am not inclined to it. See Locke, On the Human Understanding,

But it wants an issue. We are left at last uncertain in what mould the prayer will be cast, when at the close of it he 'retires and prays.' It was not so when the play was originally written. His meditations there issue in a resolve. [See Reprint of Hamlet, 1603, line 1423, in Appendix.]

Offence's gilded hand may shooe by justice,

56. offence] WARBURTON: Sh. here repeated a word which he employed two lines above, 'th' effects;' i.e. of his murder. JOHNSON: He that does not amend what can be amended retains his offence. The King kept the crown from the right heir. CLARENDON: See 'theft,' III, ii, 84.
57. corrupted 'currents'] WALKER (Crit. iii, 267): Write 'currents,' as in 1 Hen. IV: II, iii, 58. (Note, too, occurrences, Hen. V: V, Prologue, line 40.)
LETTSON (Footnote to the above): In Beau. & Fl., Beggar's Bush, I, i, 8: 'So much to all the occurrences of my country,' we have the word at full length. So, in Hamlet, V, ii, 344. [Unless we adopt this excellent emendation of Walker's, we are forced to the conclusion of CLARENDON's, that these lines, 57 and 58, offer an example of that confusion of metaphor so frequent in Sh. Compare III, i, 59.] This 'confusion of metaphor' is certainly 'frequent' enough, but I can see no need of retaining as an instance of it a passage that can be cleared up by an apostrophe. The word is given in full, occurrences, in Miscellaneous Obs. on Hamlet, 1752, p. 37. ED.]

59. prize] COLLIER (ed. 2): There cannot be a doubt of the propriety of an emendation ['purse of the (MS)] of an error, which perhaps arose from the use of short-hand in transcribing the words; purse and 'prize' being spelt with the same letters. DYCE (Strictures, &c. p. 189): The 'prize' is equivalent to 'the thing acquired by wicked means,' i.e. the crown.

JOHNSON: What can repentance do for a man that cannot be penitent, for a man who has only part of penitence, distress of conscience, without the other part, resolution of amendment? WALKER (Pers. 159): Write cannot, with the accent on the last

69. assay] See BRAN's forcible explanation of this word, III, i, 59, p. 208.

72. well] COLERIDGE: This speech well marks the difference between crime and guilt of habit. The conscience here is still admitted to audience. Nay, even as an audible soliloquy, it is far less improbable than is supposed by such as have watched men only in the beaten road of their feelings. But the final, "All may be well!" is remarkable; the degree of merit attributed by the self-flattering soul to its own struggle, though baffled, and to the indefinite half-promise, half-command, to persevere in religious duties. The solution is in the divine medium of the Christian doctrine of expiation; not what you have done, but what you are, must de-terminate.

81. broad blown] CLARENDON: Compare what the Ghost says of himself, I, v, 76, &c.

81. flush] CLARENDON: Full of sap and vigor.

82. audit] WARBURTON: From these lines, and some others, it appears that Sh. had drawn the first sketch of this play without his Ghost; and, when he added that machinery, he forgot to strike out these lines. For the Ghost had told him very circumstantially how his audit stood; and he was now satisfied with the reality of the vision. RITSON: As it appears from the Ghost's own relation that he was in purgatory, Hamlet's doubt could only be how long he was to continue there.

83. our...thought] Both CALDECOTT and DELIUS connect 'our' with 'circumstance,' the former paraphrasing: 'the measure or estimate of what may have reached us,' the latter, 'according to human relations and thoughts.' CLARENDON, on the other hand, connects 'our' with 'thoughts,' and paraphrases: 'the circumstance and course of our thought,' adding, 'We have a similar use of the possessive pronoun, I, iv, 73; III, ii, 321.' In Two Gent. I, i, 36, and Tro. & Cys. III, iii, 114, 'circumstance' means the details of an argument. So here 'circumstance of thought' means the details over which thought ranges, and from which its conclusions are formed.

85. To take] For instances of the infinitive indefinitely used, see ABBOTT, §§ 356, 357, and Macb. IV, ii, 69. CLARENDON: In taking him.

88. hent] THEOBALD (Nicholls's Illust. ii, 572): We must either restore hent or hint. [Not repeated in his ed.] WARBURTON (Nicholls's Illust. ii, 648): The true word is plainly hent, command. cannot be accused of plagiarism for having adopted hint in his text. JOHNSON: To 'hent' is used by Sh. for to seize, to catch, to lay hold on. 'Hent' is therefore hold, or seizure. 'Lay hold on him, sword, at a more horrid time.' CALDECOTT: 'Have a more fierce, rash, or headlong grasp or purpose.' 'Hystym or hentyn, rapio, arripio.'—Prompt. Parv. WHITE: 'A more horrid having, taking, opportunity. STAUNTON: 'Feel or be conscious of a more terrible purpose.' DYE (Glos.): A hold, an opportunity to be seized. CLARENDON: Equivalent to grip. Hamlet, as he leaves hold of his sword, bids it wait for a more terrible occasion to be grasped again. MOBERLY: A more fell grasp on the villain. JOHN DAVIES (N. & Qu., 11 March, 1876): More probably here used in a sense common in some of the western counties, meaning the course or passage of the ploughshare up the furrow. This is the W. hyme, O. W. hent (Zeuss, 100, 101), a way, a course; compare Lat. sem-iis, Gothic sinitis. Hamlet's words would convey to the mind of a West-countryman a very forcible image; the sword, in its shearing through the flesh, being compared to the passage of a ploughshare through the earth.

94, 95. JOHNSON: This speech, in which Ham., represented as a virtuous character, is not content with taking blood for blood, but contrives damnation for the man that he would punish, is too horrible to be read or to be uttered. M. MASON: Yet some moral may be extracted from it, as all his subsequent calamities were owing to this savage refinement of revenge. STEEVENS cites from Webster's White Devil, 1612; The Honest Lawyer, 1616; the third of Beau. & Fl.'s Four Plays in One, to show that the same fiend-like disposition is displayed by the various characters there portrayed. MALONE, to the same end, cites Machin's The Dumb Knight, 1633. As this does not illustrate Sh., but his successors, I have not repeated the half page from the Var. 1821. ED.] REED: I think it not improbable, that when Sh. put this horrid sentiment into the mouth of Ham., he might have recollected the following story: 'One of these monsters meeting his enemy unarmed, threatened to kill him, if he denied not God, his power, and essential properties, viz. his mercy, suffrance, &c., the which when the other, desiring life, pronounced with great horror, kneeling upon his knees; the bravo cried out, nowe will I kill thy body and soul, and at that instant thrust him through with his rapier.'—Brief Discourse of the Spanish State, with a Dialogue annexed intitled Philo-balistis, 410, 1590, p. 24. age in which he lived. The true question is not whether this practice were founded in religion, but whether or not Sh. gave a faithful picture of human nature in a barbarous age. With our ruder Northern ancestors, revenge, in general, was handed down in families as a duty, and the more refined and exquisite, the more honorable it was; and this character or feature of it is to be found in every book that in those times applies to the subject. And it was a subject brought upon the stage by subsequent tragedians as late as the middle of the seventeenth century. Sh. has here in some sort laid a ground for the introduction of it by making the King himself proclaim (IV, vii, 129): ‘Revenge should have no bounds,’ and he makes even the philosophasing and moralizing Squire of Kent, in his beloved retirement from the turmoils of the world, exclaim on killing Cade, 2 Hen. VI: And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.’ WORDSWORTH (Shakespeare’s Knowledge of the Bible, p. 208) finds for Ham. the same palliation as does Caldecott.

96. physic] DELIUS: Hamlet calls his temporary forbearance a physic which does not impart life to his foe, but prolongs his illness.

96. HUDSON: Hamlet here flies off to an ideal revenge, in order to quiet his filial feelings without violating his conscience; effecting a compromise between them, by adjourning a purpose which, as a man, he dare not execute, nor, as a son, abandon.
He afterwards asks Horatio:—‘Is’t not a perfect conscience, to quit him with this arm?’ which confirms the view here taken, as it shows that even then his mind was not at rest on that score.

97, 98. COLERIDGE: Oh what a lesson concerning the essential difference between wishing and willing, and the folly of all motive-mongering, while the individual self remains!

The same word is used upon a like occasion in Merry Wives, III, iii, 96. Johnson: The advocates of 'sence forget that the contrivance of Pol. to overhear the conference was no more told to the Queen than to Ham. 'I'll silence, &c., is 'I'll use no more words.' Hunter (ii, 256): When Q, was altered, the text stood: 'I'll ensence me here,' in printing en fell out, and was replaced wrongly; sence, which remained, was then altered to 'silence.' Delius: As elsewhere, Polonius here thinks that he cannot be silent without letting it be known that he could and should say much more. Dyce: 'Silence' may be right; but Hammer's alteration cannot be called an improbable one, in view of the corresponding words of Qo. White: Hamner's change is very plausible. WHITE: The Fl may be right, the intended emphasis of Hamlet's reply being in that case, 'you question with an idle tongue.' KNIGHT (ed. li): The antithesis is in 'answer' and 'question,' and not in 'idle' and 'wicked.' Besides, 'wicked' was too strong an epithet for Ham. to apply to his mother,—inconsistent with that filial respect which he never wholly abandoned.

MALONE: Bullokar's Expositor defines an 'Index' by 'A Table in a booke.' The table was almost always prefixed to books. Indexes, in the modern sense, were very uncommon. Dyce (Gloss.): Index, a prelude, anything preparatory to another. Tschischwitz: The explanations of 'in the index' are very lame. Instead of 'in,' we should manifestly read it, and the sense is, 'What act, that roars so loud and thunders, is my accuser?' 'index' being understood in its ancient judicial sense.

53. picture] Davies (Dram. Misc., Dublin, 1784, vol. iii, p. 63): It has been the constant practice of the stage, since the Restoration, for Ham. to produce from his pocket two pictures in little of his father and uncle, not much bigger than large coins or medallions. Instead of movable scenery, which was first introduced from France by Betterton in 1662, Shakespeare's stage made use of tapestry. Two full-length portraits in the tapestry of the Queen's closet might be of service in this scene. Steevens: It is evident from the words, 'A station,' &c., that these pictures, which are introduced as miniatures on the stage, were meant for whole lengths, being part of the furniture of the Queen's closet. Ham., who in a former scene had censured those who gave 'forty, fifty ducats apiece' for his uncle's 'picture in little,' would hardly have condescended to carry such a thing in his pocket. Malone: The introduction of miniatures in this place appears to be a modern innovation. A print prefixed to Rowe's edition of Hamlet, 1709, proves this. There the two royal portraits are exhibited as half-lengths, hanging in the Queen's closet; and either thus, or as whole-lengths, they were probably exhibited from the time of the original performance to the death of Betterton. To half-lengths, however, the same objection lies as to miniatures. Steevens: We may also learn that from this print the trick of kicking the chair down on the appearance of the Ghost was adopted by modern Hamlets from the practice of their predecessors. Caldecott objects to miniatures, because the audience could not then be permitted to judge of what they hear, nor make any estimate of the comparative excellence of the features, nor could the 'station' and the 'combination and the form' be adequately represented in so confined a space. Completely to do away with the objection that it is not probable that Ham. should have about him his uncle's picture, a Bath actor once suggested the snatching of it from his mother's neck. Hunter (ii, 256): Perhaps Holman's way was the best. The picture of the then King hung up in the lady's closet, but the miniature of the king who was dead was produced by Ham. from his bosom. Fitzgerald (Life of Garrick, ii, 65) suggests that the pictures be seen with the mind's eye only; a suggestion adopted by Irving and Salvini. Fechter follows the suggestion of the Bath actor mentioned by Caldecott, and tears the miniature from his mother's neck and casts it away. Rossit only tears it from his mother's neck, but dashes it to the ground and stamps on the fragments. Edwin Booth makes use of two miniatures, taking one from his own neck, and the other from his mother's.—A. I. Fish.]

54. counterfeit presentment] Caldecott: The picture, or mimic representation. See Mer. of Ven. III, ii, 116. Claremond: 'Counterfeit,' of course, is here used as an adjective. It is given by Cotgrave as an equivalent to the French faux trait.

Dyce, 1850]: ' — a mess of porridge? that will preserve life, make her round and plump, and batten more than you are aware.' Also, Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607: '— and for milk I batten was with blood.' CALDECOTT: Thus, Milton's Lycidas, I. 29: 'Battening
You cannot call it love, for at your age
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgement; and what judgement
Would step from this to this? Sense sure you have,
Else could you not have motion; but sure that sense
Is apoplex'd; for madness would not err,

our flocks with the fresh dews of night.' Dyce (Gloss.): 'To batten (grow fat), pinguesce.'—Coles's Lat. and Eng. Dict. Clarendon: Cotgrave gives 'to battle' as equivalent to 'Prendre chair,' s. v. 'Chair.' The word 'battles' is no doubt derived from the same root. It occurs transitorily in the above quotation from Marlowe and Milton, and intransitorily in Jonson's Fox, I, i: 'With these thoughts so battens.'

69. hey-day] Steevens: Thus, in Ford’s 'Tis Pity She’s a Whore, 1633: '—must The hey-day of your luxury be fed Up to a surfeit.' Caldecott: High day is Johnson's explanation. It must mean the meridian glow. See 'such highday wit.'—Mer. of Ven. II, ix, 98. Wedgwood: German Heida! Hoya! exclamations of high spirits, active enjoyment. Hence, hey-day, the vigor and high spirits of youth, where the spelling is probably modified under an erroneous impression that there is something in the meaning of the word which indicates a certain period of life. Clarendon: The meaning is obvious, but the derivation uncertain.

71. Sense] Warburton: From what philosophy our editors learnt this, I cannot tell. Since motion depends so little upon sense, that the greatest part of motion in the universe is amongst bodies devoid of sense. We should read: 'Else, could you not have motion,' i.e. intellect, reason, &c. This alludes to the famous peripatetic principle of Nil fit in intellectu, quod non fuerit in sensu. Capell (i, 140): 'Sense' is reason, since she moved and performed other actions that belonged to humanity, the presumption was she had the reason belonging to it. Steevens: Whichsoever of the readings be the true one, the poet was not indebted to this boasted philosophy [referred to by Warburton] for his choice. Malone: 'Sense' has been already used for sensation in line 38, above. Staunton: The meaning is: 'Sense (i.e. the sensibility to appreciate the distinction between external objects) you must have, or you would no longer feel the impulse of desire.' This signification of 'motion' might be illustrated by numerous examples from our early writers, but the accompanying out of Sh. will suffice: Meas. for Meas. I, iv, 59; Oth. I, iii, 95; Ibid. I, iii, 334. Clarendon: 'Motion' is emotion, as in Meas. for Meas. cited above. Modernly inclines to Staunton's explanation.

73. apoplex'd] Clarendon: We have 'apoplex,' for 'apoplexy,' in Ben Jonson, For I, i, p. 188, ed. Gifford: 'How does his apoplex?' And in Beau. & Fl.
HAMLET

Philaster, II, ii: 'She's as cold of her favour as an apoplexy.' The word is not found in Sh.; for the reading 'apoplexy' in 2 Hen. IV: IV, iv, 130, is a conjectural emendation made by Pope for the metre's sake.

73. err] CLARENDON: 'Would not err so,' the sense being completed by what follows.

74. thrall'd] HUDSON: Sense was never so dominated by the delusions of insanity but that it retained some power of choice.

75. quantity] CLARENDON: 'Portion.' Some disparagement is implied in the word, as in III, ii, 38; V, i, 258; King John, V, iv, 23.

77. hoodman-blind] SINGER: 'The Hoodwinke play, or hoodmanblinde, in some places called the blindmanbuf.'—Baret's Alvearie. COLLIER (ed. 2): An explanation of the game, if wanted, may be found in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes.

CLARENDON: See All's Well, IV, iii, 136. Cotgrave gives: 'Cignemusset. The childish play called Hodman blind, Harrie-racket, or, are you all hid.'

81. mope] STEEVENS: Could not exhibit such marks of stupidity. See Temp. V, i, 239.

82. hell] Warburton: Hamner's change is nonsense. White: Hamner's change is very specious.

83. mutine] STEEVENS: Mutineers are called 'mutines' in V, ii, 6. MALONE. To 'mutine' 'anciently signified to rise in mutiny. Thus, in Knolles's History of the Turks, 1603: 'The Janissaries—became wonderfully discontented and began to mutine in diverse parts of the citie.' CLARENDON: See Jonson's Sejanus, III, i: 'Had but thy legions there rebell'd or mutined.' The verb does not occur again in Sh. Cotgrave gives: 'Mutiner: to mutine,' and 'Mutinateur: a mutiner.' This form, mutiner, occurs in Cor. I, i, 254, but in Temp. III, ii, 41, F, has 'mutineere.' [See also WALKER, Ver. 222.]

88. grained] Theobald: Suffers Reason to be the Bawd to Appetite. Malone:
See Ven. & Ad. 792.
90. grained] Marsh (Lectures on the English Language, New York, 1859, p. 67, et seq.): Granum, in Latin, signifies a seed or kernel, and it was early applied to all small objects resembling seeds, and finally to all minute particles. Hence it was applied to the round, seed-like form of the dried body, or rather ovarium, of an insect of the genus coccus, which furnished a variety of red dyes. Granum becomes grana in Spanish, graine in French, and grain in English, meaning a dye produced by the coccus insect, often called in commerce kermes. The color obtained from kermes or grain was peculiarly durable. When, then, a merchant recommended his purple stuffs as being dyed in grain, he originally meant that they were dyed with kermes, and would wear well; and this phrase was afterwards applied to other colors, as a mode of expressing the quality of durability. See Com. of Err. III, ii, 108; and Twelfth Night, I, v, 256. In both these examples [as also in the present instance from Hamlet] it is the sense of permanence (a well-known quality of the purple produced by the grain or kermes) that is expressed. It is familiarly known that if wool be dyed before spinning, the color is usually more permanent than when the spun yarn or manufactured cloth is first dipped in the tincture. When the original sense of grain grew less familiar, and it was used chiefly as expressive of fastness of color, the name of the effect was transferred to an ordinary known cause, and dyed in grain, originally meaning dyed with kermes, then dyed with fast color, came at last to signify dyed in the wool or other raw material. Clarendon: Cotgrave has 'Graine: . . . graine wherewith cloth is dyed in graine; Scarlet dye, Scarlet in graine.'
91. leave] Steevens: 'To part with, give up.' See Two Gent. IV, iv, 79; Mer. of Ven. V, i, 172.
92. enseamed] Theobald: Seam is properly the fat or grease of a hog. It is used in Tros. & Cres. II, iii, 195. Steevens: Beau. & Fl. use enseamed in the same sense. See [Triumph of Death, p. 535, vol. ii, ed. Dyce]: 'His lechery enseamed
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love

Ham. A murderer and a villain;

A slave that is not twentieth part the title
Of your precedent lord; a vice of kings;

Hamlet. Upon him. In The Book of Hawkyng, bl. l., n. d., we are told that 'ensayme of a hawke is the grece.' In Randle Holme's Academy of Armory and Blason, B. II, ii, p. 238, we are told that 'Ensame' is the purging of a hawk from her glut and grease. From the next page in the same work we learn that the glut is 'a mildy substance in the belly of the hawk.' Henley: In the West of England the inside fat of a goose, when dissolved by heat, is called its seam. White: The phrase is so gross that, were it not for Hamlet's mood, we might willingly believe that incestuous of Q2 is the true text. [Cotgrave gives: 'Gramouse, a dish made of slices of cold meat fried with Hogs sause.' There is also a note on this passage in 55, but the foregoing explanations are ample for so unsavory a subject. Ed.]

Hamlet. Enter in] Abbott ($159): In for into, with enter, see Rich. II: II, iii, 60; Rich. III: V, iii, 227.

98. vice] Theobald was the first who noted that this means 'that buffoon character which used to play the Fool in old Plays.' In the Variorum notes to 2 Hen.

IV, III, ii, 343, various fanciful etymologies of the word are given. Douce (i, 468) closes the discussion by showing that the character in the old moral-plays, known as the 'Vice,' was doubtless so named from the vicious qualities attributed to him, and from the mischievous nature of his general conduct. Collier (Hist. of Eng. Dram.

Poetry, ii, 204, et seq.) gives the best account of this curious personage in a passage quoted by Dyce (Gloss.) As the Devil now and then appeared without the Vice, so the Vice sometimes appeared without the Devil. Malone tells us that 'the principal employment of the Vice was to belabor the Devil,' but, although he was frequently so engaged, he had higher duties. He figured now and then in the religious plays of a later date, and, in The Life and Repentance of Mary Magdalen, 1567, he performed the part of her lover, before her conversion, under the name of Infidelity; in King Darius, 1565, he also acted a prominent part, by his own impulses to mischief, under the name of Iniquity, without any prompting from the representative of the principle of evil. Such was the general style of the Vice, and as Iniquity he is spoken of by Sh. (Rich. III: III, i, 82) and Ben Jonson ( Staple of News, second Intermean). The Vice and Iniquity seem, however, some-

HAMLET

You heavenly guards!—What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas, he's mad!

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, lapsed in time and passion, lets go by

Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.

that date, in this scene, the spirit was not appareled as when it had before appeared on the platform. This is important, because it completely explains Hamlet's exclamation in line 135. In the (MS) it is unarmed. If, therefore, the Ghost did not wear a 'nightgown,' he was unarmed at the time of the old annotator. ELZE: 'Who?' asks Goethe (Nachgelassene Werke, vol. v, p. 61), in reference to the stage-direction in Q1, 'does not feel a momentary pang on comprehending this? to whom is it not repulsive? And yet when we grasp it, and reflect upon it, we find that it is the right way.' The Ghost is not here introduced, as in Act I, in warlike guise, but in his every-day clothing. . . . We must not be too precise in the matter of this nightgown,—it refers to the ordinary clothes of the old king. KIGHTLEY (Exp. p. 294): As the Ghost makes but one short speech, if it could be so managed, it would be more psychologic and effective for him to remain invisible, except to Ham. mentally, and his voice only be heard by the audience. CLARENDON: Nightgown here is the same as dressing-gown.

103. me . . . me] MARSHALL (p. 51): The use of the singular number may be accidental, or it may intimate that Ham. felt this visitation to be addressed to him alone. On the former occasion he used the plural.

104. would your] Dyce: The compositor of the Folio has here omitted by mistake the letter r. STRATMANN agrees with Dyce. CORSON: Making 'figure' the vocative [as in Rowe's text] is the better reading. 'Figure' doesn't make, logically, a very good subject to 'would.'

107. time and passion] JOHNSTON: That, having suffered time to slip and passion to cool, lets go, &c. CLARENDON: Or rather the indulgence of mere passion has diverted him from the execution of his purpose. COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) has fume for 'time.' We do not adopt fume, because, though it may have been the word used by some actor when the old annotator saw the play, we doubt if it were the word of Sh., who probably used 'lapse'd in time' to indicate Hamlet's indecision, which had allowed the proper period for revenge to escape. ELZE applauds and adopts fume.

121. hair...Starts] Clarendon [reading ‘hair...Start’]: ‘Hair,’ in fact, may be considered as a noun of multitude, and the intervention of the plural substantive, ‘excrements,’ would also suggest the plural verb.

121. excrements] Pope: The hairs are excrementitious, that is, without life or sensation. Malone: See Macb. V, v, 11-13. Whalley: Not only the hair of animals having neither life nor sensation was called an excrement, but the feathers of birds had the same appellation. Thus, in Issak Walton’s Compleat Angler, P. 1, c. i, p. 9, ed. 1666: ‘I will not undertake to mention the several kinds of fowl by which this is done, and his curious palate pleased by day; and which, with their very excrements, afford him a soft lodging at night.’ Nares: Everything that appears to vegetate or grow upon the human body; as the hair, the beard, the nails. Dyce (Gloss.): ‘And albeit hayre were of it selfe the most abiet excrement that were, yet should Poppeas hayre be reputed honourable. I am not ignorant that hayre is noted by many as an excrement, a fleeting commodity. . . . An excrement it is, I deny not,’ &c.—Chapman’s Justification of a strange action of Nero, &c. 1629, sig. B 2. Clarendon: Bacon, Natural History, cent. 1, sect. 58, says, ‘Living creatures put forth (after their period of growth) nothing that is young but hair and nails, which are excrements and no parts.’

It is remarkable that we have the same error in Meas. for Meas. III, i, 24. The ‘pious action’ of the Ghost could not alter things already affected, but might move Ham. to a less stern mood of mind. STRATMANN pronounces this conj. of Singer’s very plausible. HUDSON: I can find no meaning in ‘effects’ that will run smooth with the context. CLARENDON: The accomplishment of my stern purposes.

The actresses make the Queen as mad as Ham., and are generally applauded for their mistake.

135. See notes on stage-direction, line 102. STEEVENS, not having the aid afforded by Qs, endeavored to get rid of the discrepancy between the ‘armor’ of the earlier scenes and the ‘habit’ here by punctuating the line thus: ‘My father—in his habit—as he lived!’ MASON (p. 390): A man’s armor, who is used to wear it, may be called his habit, as well as any other kind of clothing. ‘As he lived’ means ‘as if he were alive—as if he lived.’ [It is probable, as CLARENDON suggests, that ‘the Ghost appears in the ordinary dress of the king.’] that it is an imploitation to his own virtue. [Staunton therefore marks it as an

'Aside,' with a comma after 'Forgive me this,'] CLARKE: Surely the context

That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,

161, 162. eat . . . devil] THEOBALD: ‘Habits devil’ arose from the supposed necessity of contrasting devil and angel. ‘Habits evil’ I owe to the sagacity of Dr Thirlby. That is, custom, which, by inuring us to ill habits, makes us lose the apprehension of their being really ill, as easily will reconcile us to the practice of good actions. Theobald, in his correspondence with Warburton (Nichols’s Illustr. of Lit. ii, 574), says: ‘I would read and print “doth eat Of habit’s evil,” &c., i.e. of the evil of habit.’ [Herein he is followed by SINGER (ed. 2) and WHITE. ED.] JOHNSON: I think Thirlby’s conjecture wrong; angel and devil are evidently opposed. MALONE: I incline to think with Dr Thirlby. STEEVES: I would read: Or habit’s devil. The poet first styles custom a monster, and may aggravate and amplify his description by adding, that it is the ‘demon who presides over habit.’—That monster custom, or habit’s devil, is yet an angel in this particular. BOSWELL: ‘Habit’s devil’ custom, or habit’s devil, is yet an angel in this particular. BECKET (i, 60) and MITFORD (Gent. Magaz. 1845) both conjectured ‘If habit’s devil,’ the latter paraphrases: ‘If that monster, custom, which in general is the devil of habit, leading to evil, yet in this thing acts the good part of angel, &c.’ CALDECOTT: ‘That monster, custom, who devours all sense, all just and correct feeling, (being also) the evil genius of (our) propensities or habits, is, nevertheless, in this particular a good angel.’ It has been suggested that if a comma were placed after ‘habits the sense would be—‘A monster or devil, who makes mankind insensible to the quality of actions which are habitual.’ KNIGHT: The edd. who have made ‘habits’ the genitive case cannot explain their own reading. As we print the passage it means: custom, who destroys all nicety of feeling,—sense,—sensibility,—who is the devil that governs our habits,—is yet an angel in his, &c. COLLIER (ed. i): Our punctuation means, ‘that monster, custom, who is a devil, devouring all sense of habit, is still an angel in this,’ &c. SINGER (ed. ii): The old copy indicates clearly the misprint, for the word is here devill, while just below and elsewhere it is uniformly divell when the evil spirit is meant. DELIUS (ed. i): The opposition between ‘angel’ and ‘devil’ shows that the latter as well as the former refers to ‘monster, custom:’ ‘devil,’ therefore, must be in apposition, separated, it is true, from the subject by the subordinate clause. COLLIER (ed. ii): We now adopt Thirlby’s emendation, although it is very possible that an opposition between ‘devil’ and ‘angel’ was intended. Still, the passage is decidedly corrupt. WHITE: The text of the Qq is clearly wrong. ‘Angel’ is opposed to ‘m. ster’ in the line above. The old text also nullifies the force of the important word ‘likewise,’ two lines below. STAUNTON: The trifling change we have taken the liberty to make, while doing little violence to the original, may be thought, it is hoped, to give at least as good a meaning as any other which has been proposed. KEIGHTLEY: The verb ‘eate’ here could never have come from the poet’s pen; for it makes pure nonsense. I read create with the greatest confidence, of which the first two letters must have been effaced in the poet’s MS. We have an exact parallel in smell, ‘all,’ in Timon, I, ii, 132. ‘Sense’ seems here to signify kind, manner, way. [Keightley’s text reads : ‘That monster, custom, who all sense doth create Of habits, devil is angel yet in this,’ &c., which is to me unintelligible. Ed.] CLARENDON: The words as they stand yield a very intelligible sense and require no alteration. That monster, Custom, who destroys all natural feeling and prevents it from being exerted, and is the malignant attendant on habits, is yet angel in this respect, &c. The double meaning of the word ‘habits’ suggested the ‘frock or livery’ in l. 164. MOBERLY:

This noble passage contains Shakespeare’s philosophy of custom (loc), in which, happier than some professed moralists, he sees that the function of habit is to work upward towards a formed resolution.

164. livery] MOBERLY: Just as a new dress or uniform becomes familiar to us by habit, so custom enables us readily to execute the outward and practical part of the good and fair actions which we inwardly desire to do.

169. master] MALONE: For the insertion of the word curb I am answerable.
The printer or corrector of a late Quarto, finding the line nonsense, omitted the word either, and substituted master in its place. The modern editors have accepted the substituted word, and yet retain either; by which the metre is destroyed. The word omitted in the first copy was undoubtedly a monosyllable. STEEVENS: This very rational conjecture may be countenanced by the same expression in Mer. of Ven. IV, i, 217. SINGER (ed. i) [reading ‘either quell,’ followed by MOBERLY]: The occurrence of curb in so opposite a sense just before is against Malone’s emendation.
STAUNTON: ‘Master,’ which, as it affords sense, though destructive to the metre, we retain, not, however, without acknowledging a preference for Malone’s emendation.
WALKER, Vers. 75: Read ‘either master the’ devil,’ &c. Moreover, ‘curb’ occurs fourteen lines before.—CRIT. i, 308. BALEY (ii, 12): Ham. means to say that custom can either bring the devil into our natures, or throw him out. I therefore propose: ‘And either house the devil,’ which forms an appropriate counterpart to [169. 'either master the devil.]

'throw him out.' Forsyth proposed the same word in his Notes, &c., 102, and also in N. & Qu., 1 Dec. '66. Elze (Athenaeum, 11 Aug. '66) proposes, 'And either usher the devil,' and thinks that the similarity of sound in the two consecutive words, 'either usher,' may have caused the compiler of Q, to omit the latter. H. D. (Athenaeum, 18 Aug. '66): Why not read, '7o master the devil, and throw him out.' Bolton Corney (N. & Qu., 8 Dec. '66): Read 'And either aid the,' &c. J. Wetherell (N. & Qu., 22 Dec. '66) believes that sound and sense are satisfied by 'And his there the devil;' a speedy summons is hereby contrasted with a dismissal implied in 'throw him out.' Cartwright (New Readings, &c., p. 37): Read 'And either lay the,' &c. Nicholson (N. & Qu., 19 Dec. 1868): I propose, 'And either throne,' &c. Its alliteration explains its omission, and why 'cast out,' the wording of every version, was changed into 'throw out.' It restores to the line its musical tone. It gives the exact sense required. Persistence in well-doing, whether by doing good or by leaving evil undone, exorcises the Tempter with wondrous potency; but persistence in evil so destroys rebelling conscience, that the prince of this world unresistingly ascends our vacant throne, and makes of us willing and unresisting servants for his work. Lastly, it gives not only the exact sense, but the full sense, required by the context, whether above or below it. Clarendon: It seems more probable that something is omitted which is contrasted with 'throw out,' and this may have been 'lay' or 'lodge.' The latter was the technical word used in Harriot's Declaration, c. 12. Morely [reading 'either quell']: Either quell him once for all, or baffle his attacks whenever they arise. Ingleby (St. Hemenewe's, p. 125) records two emendations suggested to him by friends: Sylvester proposes, 'either mask the devil,' of which Q is the corruption. Compare III, i, 47-49. And C. J. Munro 'half-seriously' suggests: 'And entertain the devil.' 'It is not easy to discover,' says Ingleby, 'why the words suggested by Malone, Singer, and the rest] should find more favor than a score of others just as good.' Curb suggests rein, rule, thrall, bind, chain, &c.; quell, lay, and couch suggest charm. worst, quench, foil, bulk, cross, thwart, daunt, shame, cow, tame, &c.; while aid suggests fire, route, stir, serve, feed, &c. Besides which, there are many dissyllables that beth the sense and measure, as abate, unabwe, &c. And why not read 'over-master,' which occurs in a former scene? Thus we see what a wealth of suggestion has been ignored! We venture to call attention to the evident requirements of the passage: 'The stamp of nature' is not new to us in this connection, nor in this play; we have had it twice in the second ghost-scene, viz. 'the vicious mole of nature,' and 'the stamp of one defect.' Now Hamlet would say, 'Use almost can change, or convert, this stamp of nature;' so that an antithesis is not only not required, but is impertinent. Use, he would say, can either subdue 'habit's devil' by following out his own prescription of gradual weaning from evil, or (if the worst come to the worst, and revolution be necessary) cast him out; and either of these can such use, or change of habit, effect 'with wondrous potency.' The keynote of the whole passage is 'Reformation, by gradually subduing evil habits;' and so far from Hamlet's advice, 'assume a virtue if you have it not,' being a recommendation of hypocrisy, it is given solely with the view of facilitating inward amendment, and is therefore honest and sincere. The missing word, then, must at least import the subduing of the devil of habit. In the First Quarto we have the expression, 'And win [i.e. wean] yourself by little as you may' from the sin to which you
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night;
And when you are desirous to be blest,
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord,

[the Queen] have habituated yourself. Now, that weaning by little and little, or gradually weaning the will and affections from the customary sin, 'recurring and suggesting still,' is just what the missing word, were it recovered, would assuredly be found to express or imply. Lay and shame are equally acceptable in sense, and both afford a perfect rhythm. Perhaps shame is the finer reading of the two. At the same time it must be owned that Hamlet's prescription is calculated to do little for the sinner; at best, we fear, to 'skin and film the rancorous place.' We can hardly say that conjecture has yet determined the best reading here, though it cannot be said that sufficient indications are wanting for its guidance. Unfortunately, it is in the very nature of the case that some doubt should continue to vex this passage, after conjecture has done its work.

172. of you] SEYMOUR (ii, 190): The desire to be blest will show contrition, and constitute a state of grace; consequently, it will render you fit to bestow a blessing upon me.

174. MALONE: To punish me by making me the instrument of this man's death, and to punish this man by my hand. MOBERLY: To give me this penal task, which will be the worse done for my having to do it.

175. WALKER Crd. ii, 110.

178, 179. I...behind] DELIUS: These two lines, of which the first explains Hamlet's sudden change of bearing towards his mother and his cruel speeches after she, should be spoken as an Aside.

183. mouse] STREEVES: A term of endearment. In Warner’s Albion’s England, 1602, b. ii, ch. xvi: ’God bless thee, mouse, the bridegroom said.’ Again, in the Menachmi, 1595: ’Shall I tell thee, sweet mouse?’ Burton’s Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1652, p. 527: ‘— pleasant names may be invented, bird, mouse, lamb, pus, pigeon, &c.’ CLARENDON: See Twelfth Night, I, v, 69; and Love’s Lab. V, ii, 19. Muss, corrupted from ‘mouse,’ occurs several times in Jonson’s Every Man in his Humour, II, 1.

184. reechy] DYCE (Gloss.): ‘Reechy is greasy, sweaty. . . Lancham [in his Letter, &c.], speaking of “three pretty puzels” in a morris-dance, says they were “as bright az a breast of bacon,” that is, bacon hung in the chimney; and hence reechy, which in its primitive signification is smoky, came to imply greasy.’—RITSON.
CLARENDON: In the present passage the word may have been suggested by ‘bloat,’ two lines before, which has also the meaning ‘to cure herrings by hanging them in the smoke.’

186. ravel] DYCE (Gloss.): To unravel, unveave,—to unfold, to disclose.

woman than that she is a queen, fair, sober, wise, of course it is natural for her to take the scum of the earth into her inmost confidence.

190. gib] STREEVES: A common name for a cat. See Chaucer’s Romance of the Rose, 6:20: ‘— Gibbe oure cat, That wayeteth mice and ratte to kyllen.’ NARES: A male cat. An expression exactly analogous to that of a Jack-ass, the one being formerly called Gib, or Gilbert, as commonly as the other Jack. Tom-cat is now the usual term, and for a similar reason. Tibert is said to be the old French for Gilbert, and is the name of the cat in Reineke Fuchs. In Sherwood’s English-daw, &c. CLARENDON: Graymalkin was the female cat. The toad, bat, and cat were supposed to be familiars of witches, and acquainted with their mistresses secrets.

[194. famous ape] WARNER: Sir John Suckling, in one of his letters, may possibly allude to the same story: 'It is the story of the jackanapes and the partridges;
thou starest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let'st out another, and starest after that till it is gone too.' CLARENDON: No one has yet found the fable here alluded to.

which befals her in this world. Rue is herb of grace to her, as poor Ophelia says.

[200. England] MALONE: Sh. does not inform us how Ham. came to know that he was to be sent to England. Ros. and Guil. were made acquainted with the King's intentions for the first time in the very last scene; and they do not appear to have had any communication with the Prince since that time. Add to this, that in a subsequent scene, when the King, after the death of Pol., informs Ham. he was go to England, he expresses great surprise, as if he had not heard anything of it before.—This last, however, may, perhaps, be accounted for as contributing to his design of passing for a madman. STEARNS (Sh. Treasury, &c., p. 366): We may

207. hoist] DYCE ( Gloss.): For hoised or hoisted (not as Caldecott explains it: 'i.e. mount. Hoist is used as a verb neuter'). CLARENDON: If it is the participle of the verb hoist, it is the common abbreviated form for the participles of verbs ending in a dental. [See I, ii, 20.]
207. petar] CLARENDON: Coigreve gives: 'Petart: A Petard, or Petarre; an Engine (made like a Bell, or Morter) wherewith strong gates are burst open.'

210. line] MALONE: Still alluding to a countermine.

211. packing] CLARENDON: 'Contriving, 'plotting.' There is, of course, a play upon the other sense of the word: 'to be off quickly.' [DELIUS's interpretation of one of its meanings: 'sich belasten,' to load one's self, referring to Hamlet's lugging off Pol., is, I think, a little too fine spun. ED.]

first attempt to polish our language’ to show that anciently this word was not so offensive to delicacy as at present. Caldercott, while conceding this, nevertheless thinks that ‘there is a coarseness and want of feeling in this part of the conduct, if not in the language, of Hamlet,—an excuse for which we seek in vain at this time in the peculiarity or necessities of his situation;’ and he can account for it only by supposing that it must have been in compliance with the rude taste of the age.
Halliwell: This is one of those words which the silly caprice of fashion has invested with an imaginary coarseness. I have seen a letter, written about a century ago, in which a lady of rank, addressing a gentleman, speaks of her gout with the same nonchalance with which we should now write stomach. St aun ton: It was commonly used where we should employ entraits, and in this place really signifies no more than lack-brain or shallow-pate.

214. St aun ton: A consideration of the exigencies of the theatre in Shakespeare’s time, which not only obliged an actor to play two or more parts in the same drama, but to perform such servile offices as are now done by attendants of the stage, shows that this line is a mere interpolation to afford the player an excuse for removing the body. We append a few examples where the same expedient is adopted for the same purpose. Among them the notable instance of Sir John Falstaff carrying off the body of Harry Percy on his back,—an exploit as clumsy and unseemly as Ham-let’s ‘tagging out’ Pol., and, like that, perpetuated on the modern stage only from wheer ignorance of the circumstances which originated such a practice: Rom. & Jul.
XII, i, 201; Rich. II: V, v, 118, 119; 1 Hen. IV: V, iv, 160; 1 Hen. VI: I, iv, Ibid. IV, xiv, 138. These instances from Sh. alone, and they could easily be multi-exed, will suffice to bring into view one of the inconveniences to which the elder Dramatists were subject through the paucity of actors; and at the same time, by exhibiting the mode in which they endeavored to obviate the difficulty, may afford a key to many passages and incidents that before appeared anomalous.

215. foolish prating] Walker (Crit. i, 25): Write foolish-prating; unless, indeed, ‘foolish’ is opposed to ‘grave,’ and ‘prating’ to ‘secret.’

215. a . . . knave] Morehly: These are almost exactly the words used by the Porter at Holyrood, when Rizzio’s body was placed on a chest near his lodge (Froude, viii, 254).

216. to draw] Clarendon: For the construction compare III, ii, 339. Steevens:
Sh. has been unfortunate in his management of the story of this play, the most striking circumstances of which arise so early in its formation as not to leave him room for a conclusion suitable to the importance of its beginning. After this last interview with the Ghost the character of Ham. has lost all its consequence.

217. Good night, mother] Hunter (ii, 257): This scene has always been admired as one of the masterpieces of this great dramatic writer; and there are in it undoubtedly fine opportunities for the display of an actor's powers,—striking situations, and also fine poetry. But the question arises, To what purpose all this excitement and bustle? The scene appears to have been written for its own sake, not helping forward the story. Except that Pol. is accidentally killed in the course of it, the parties are left precisely where they were, Ham. having only in this forcible manner signified to his mother the displeasure which he felt at her conduct. But as the play was originally written this scene had a purpose. Ham. reveals to his mother his knowledge of his uncle's guilt, and his purpose of revenge; and she engages to conceal and to assist. From this time the Queen keeps up appearances with her husband, but is secretly a friend to Ham.; and there is an entire scene, afterwards withdrawn, between her and Hor., in which Hor. communicates to her confidentially the return of Ham. from England, when the dialogue ends with her saying: [see Appendix, p. 77, lines 1779-1781.] This removes all ambiguity respecting the part which the poet intended the Queen should take; according to the present regulation, her precise situation is not clearly exhibited.

Act iv] JOHNSON: This modern division into Acts is here not very happy, for the pause is made at a time when there is more continuity of action than in almost any other of the scenes. CALDECOTT suggests, and ELZE agrees with him, that Act IV should begin with the present IV, iv. The latter suggests that probably, as indicated by the Qq, the Queen goes to seek out the King as soon as Ham. has left her, and having met him in the gallery, enters with him and his courtiers one of the King's apartments.

1. heaves] WALKER (Crit. iii, 268) prefers the punctuation of the Qq, and understands 'which' before 'You.' CORSON: The King uses 'profound' equivocally, as it may mean deep literally, and deep in significance, and upon the latter meaning 'translate' bears.

the belief in his madness, and, with maternal ingenuity, makes it the excuse for his

Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd;

rash deed. This affords a clue to Hamlet's original motive in putting 'an antic disposition on' and feigning insanity; he foresaw that it might be useful to obviate suspicion of his having a steadily-pursued object in view, and to account for whatever hostile attempt he should make.

10. Whips] CLARENDON: He, which should govern the verb, is omitted. Compare III, i, 8.
11. brainish] CALDECOTT: Brain-sick mood, or conceit. CLARENDON: It does not occur again in Sh.
17. to us] DYCE, in a note on IV, v, 89, reads 'on us.'
18. short] CLARENDON: Kept, as it were, tethered, under control; opposed to loose,' IV, iii, 2.

O'er whom his very madness, like fine ore
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure. He weeps for what is done.

King. O Gertrude, come away!
The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence; and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho, Guildenstern!

Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid;
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him.
Go seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.—

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done; so, haply, slander,
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank
Transports his poison'd shot, may miss our name
And hit the woundless air. Oh, come away!
My soul is full of discord and dismay.

40. slander] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 108) suggested Happily, slander or rumour, as being at least very near, in substance, the words that had dropped out of this line. He changed them in his ed. to 'For, haply, slander.' CAPELL (Notes, 1, 141) says: 'For makes not so good connection as so;' and the majority of editors since his day have adopted this modification. THE CAMBRIDGE EDITORS (Note xxiii) : Malleus, or Ewry, in the sense in which it is often used by Sh., would suit this passage as well as 'slander.' TSCHIHSWITZ reads by this, suspicion, and understands it as referring to what the King 'means to do,' viz. send Hamlet to England. He also suggests that the lines following it down to 'woundless air' may have been an Aside. STRAT-

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis, that we may take it thence
And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge, what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end; he keeps them, like an ape doth nuts, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last imperative, otherwise Ham. tells an untruth, for he had not buried the body.

12. of] See I, iv. 18; Macb. III, vi. 27; ABBOTT, § 170.
12. sponge,] CORSIN defends the commas, maintaining, and rightly, that the sentence is not exclamatory. In modern English we should say 'in being demanded by a sponge, what,' " &c. COLERIDGE: Hamlet's madness is made to consist in the free utterance of all the thoughts that had passed through his mind before;—in fact, in telling home-truths.

15. countenance . . . authorities] CLARENDON: The first means favour, as in
I, iii, 113; V, i, 26. The latter, offices of authority.

17. nuts] FARMER conjectured, 'like an ape, an apple.' To this MALONE objected, on the ground that Sh. then would have written 'as an ape,' &c., not 'like an ape.' But WALKER (Crit. ii, 116) suspected Farmer to be right, having found in Hugh Holland a construction precisely similar: 'Where, like in Jove's [braines], Minerva keeps a coile.'

go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

27. a thing—] a thing. Q1, Jen. nothing. Han.

22. sponge ... dry again] Caldecott: ‘When princes ... have used courtiers as sponges to drink what juice they can from the poor people, they take pleasure afterwards to wring them out into their own cisterns.’—R.C.’s Hen. Ste. Apology for Herodotus, 1608. Vespasian, when reproached for bestowing high office upon persons most rapacious, answered, ‘that he served his turne with such officers as with sponges, which, when they had drunk their fill, were the fittest to be pressed.’—Barnabe Rich’s Faultes, faults and nothing but faults, 1606; also Suetonius, Vesp. c. 16.

22. ear] Stevens: A proverb since Shakespeare’s time.

26–27. The ... body] Johnson: This answer I do not comprehend. Perhaps it should be.—The body is not with the King, for the King is not with the body.

Jennins: The body, being in the palace, might be said to be with the King; though the King, not being in the same room with the body, was not with the body. Stevens: Perhaps this.—The body is in the King’s house (i.e. the present King’s), yet the King (i.e. he who should have been king) is not with the body. Intimating that the usurper is here, the true King in a better place. Or it may mean—the guilt of the murder lies with the King, but the King is not where the body lies. Douce: The body, i.e. the external appearance or person of the monarch, is with his uncle; but that the real and lawful king is not in that body. Caldecott: The King is not yet cut off from life and sovereignty: his carcase remains to the King; but the King is not with the body or carcase that you seek; the King is not with Polonius. But Hamlet’s answers are necessarily enigmatical. A more natural meaning is suggested:
The image raised, the impression made upon the King’s fears by the fate of Polonius, makes his body or carcase present to the fancy of the King, who knew and has said that ‘it had been so with him had he been there;’ but the King is not with the body, i.e. is not lying with Polonius. Others interpret, plainly enough, if admis-sibly: The body is with the King, i.e. intomb, or in the other world with the late, the real king; but the King, i.e. he who now wears the crown, the usurper, is not with the body. Singer: It may mean: The King is a body without a kingly soul, a thing—of nothing. Elze agrees with Eschenburg’s explanation: The corpse is here with the King, but the King is not with it, i.e. he is as yet no corpse. Hudson: The meaning of this intended riddle, to the best of my guessing, is: The King’s body is with the King, but not the King’s soul: he’s a King without kingli-ness. Moreley: Apparently a sententious maxim from some political book. ‘The body politic is joined to the King, yet the King is not to be considered part of the body politic, but a thing apart.’ [The present editor agrees with Clarendon, that
Ham. is talking nonsense designedly.]

29. Of nothing] JOHNSON: Should it not be read: Or nothing? When the courtiers remark that Ham. has contemnuously called the King a thing, Ham. defends himself by observing that the King must be a thing or nothing. FARMER and STEEVENS cite instances of the use of this not uncommon phrase, and WHALLEY cites Psalm cxliv, 4: 'Man is like a thing of nought.' [—Prayer Book Version. '——of vanity.'—Authorized Version.] NARES quotes Beau. & Fl. Humorous Lieutenant, IV, vi: 'And though a thing of nothing, thy thing ever.' [—p. 517, ed. Dyce.]

29. Hide...after] HAMNER: There is a play among children thus called. SINGER: Most probably what is now called 'whoop' or 'hide and seek.' WHITE: The exclamation is merely one of Hamlet's signs of feigned madness. MOBERLY: Ham. sheathes his sword ('a Toledo or an English fox'—point of fox, &c., probably from the name of a celebrated maker like Andrea di Ferrara), and, as if he were playing hide and seek, cries 'now the fox is hid: let all go after him.'

9, 10. diseases...relieved] RUSHTON (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 11): 'But I feare me wher se strange a sickness is to be recured of so unskilfull a Phisitton, that either thon wilt be to bold to practise, or my body too weake to purge. King. Bring him before us.
Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?
Ham. At supper.
King. 'At supper'? where?
Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten; a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service, two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see; if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself.
But indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. [To some Attendants] Go seek him there.

Ham. He will stay till ye come. [Exeunt Attendants.

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,
Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fiery quickness; therefore prepare thyself;
The bark is ready and the wind at help,
The associates tend, and every thing is bent
For England.

_Ham._ For England?

_King._ Ay, Hamlet.

_Ham._ Good.

_King._ So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

_Ham._ I see a cherub that sees them.—But, come; for England!—Farewell, dear mother.

_King._ Thy loving father, Hamlet.

_Ham._ My mother; father and mother is man and wife;
man and wife is one flesh, and so, my mother.—Come, for England!

_King._ Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed aboard;
Delay it not; I'll have him hence to-night;
Away! for every thing is seal'd and done

COLLIER: 'Him' [of the Ff] seems to have no reference, unless Ham. be mentally adverting to his father. MOBERLY: The cherubs are angels of love; they therefore, of course, know of such true affection as the King's for Ham._

60. free] CLARENDON: Awe still felt, though no longer enforced by the presence of

61. set] M. MASON: One of the common acceptations of the verb 'set' is to value or estimate; as we say, to set at nought. MALONE thinks that it is an elliptical expression for set by. SINGER denies the ellipsis, and quotes, without giving the authority, 'To sette or tell the pryce; estimare.' [Baretti's Alcuarie has: 'To set, or tell the price. Indicar,' which makes nothing against Malone; because 'To set' is not used absolutely, but the full phrase is 'to set the price.' Ed.] CLARENDON says that 'set' would not have been thus used had it not been familiar in the phrases, set at nought, set at a pin's fee, etc.
63. conjuring] THEOSBald (S. Rest. 109): If the 'letters,' importing the tenor of the process, were to that effect, they were certainly conjuring; but of no great use, when the sovereign process imported the same thing. Now a process might import a command, and letters conjuring a compliance with it be sent, and be of great efficacy, where the execution of the command was to be doubted of. Moreover, Ham, when he changed the substance of the commission would be likely to retain the form, and we find him using 'earnest conjurations.' As to the accent, Sh.
generally accented the first syllable. CLARENDON thinks 'conjuring' probably a misprint, although it yields a fair sense.
65. hectic] CLARENDON: Used as a substantive in Cotgrave; 'Hectique: Sicke

67. haps...begun] JOHNSON: This being the end of a scene, should, according to Shakespeare's custom, be rhymed. Perhaps he wrote, 'Howe'er my hopes, my joys are not begun.' [Collier's (MS) has hopes.] If 'haps' be retained, the meaning will be: 'till I know 'tis done, I shall be miserable,' whatever befal me.
WALKER (Cirt. iii. 268): Begun, certainly; rhyme is demanded here. As to the rest, entry. LETTSOM (Footnote to Walker): Q, gives at least sense and English.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king;
Tell him that by his license Fortinbras
Claims the conveyance of a promised march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous,
If that his majesty would aught with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye;
And let him know so.

For. Go softly on. [Exeunt Fortinbras and Soldiers.

Enter Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?

Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

6. eye] STEEVENS: Compare Ant. & Cleo. II. ii. 212. The phrase seems to have been a formulary for the royal presence. See The Establishment of the Household of Prince Henry, 1610: 'Also the gentleman-usher shall be careful to see and informe all such as doe service in the Prince's eye, that they perform their duties,' &c. Again, in The Regulations for the Government of the Queen's Household, 1627: '—— all such as doe service in the Queen's eye.' [See IV, vii, 45.]

nished to the indecision of Ham., was perhaps omitted in the Ff on account of the extreme length of the play, and as not helping on the action. COLLIER: So important is it as a key to Hamlet's character, that its omission convinces us that the abbreviation of the play as we find it in F, was the work of the players and not of Sh.
LLOYD (Crit. Essay, Singer's 2d ed. p. 345): Beautiful as the soliloquy in this scene is, I am disposed to think that the excision of it may have been deliberate,— as unnecessary, prolonging the action, and, it may be, exhibiting the weakness of Ham. too crudely; it shows him making the most definite of his resolutions to revenge precisely as he turns his back upon the last opportunity by quitting the country. The passage, however, with some others, is too fine to be suppressed, though I am inclined to think the poet sacrificed them, and worthy and properly they may take their place in brackets.

25, 26. TWO... straw] As You Like It (Gent. Mag. lx, 403): These lines are certainly given to Ham. very wrongly, as they undoubtedly belong to the Capt. Ham. appears entirely ignorant of the object of the Norwegian army. The Capt. speaks with contempt of the little patch of ground, which for five ducats he would not farm, to recover which so many souls were to be sacrificed and so much money expended. After this, Ham. begins very properly, 'This is an imposthume,' &c. Tschischwitz goes still farther, and gives the whole speech down to 'dies,' to the Capt., on the ground that this speech does not accord with what Ham. says afterwards, where honor is the cause that impels him to the struggle, not an 'imposthume of much wealth and peace.'

34. market] JOHNSON: That for which he sells his time. SEYMOUR (ii, 195): This means his prime of life, the time at which he ought to exert his faculties to the best advantage and profit. CLAIRENDON: Possibly, the business in which he employs his time.

To fust in us unused. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom
And ever three parts coward,—I do not know
Why yet I live to say 'This thing's to do,'
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me;
Witness this army, of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
Whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd
Makes mouths at the invisible event:
Exposing what is mortal and unsure
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare, Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great
Is not to stir without great argument,
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw
When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep, while to my shame I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That for a fantasy and trick of fame
Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough and continent
To hide the slain? Oh, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

as to a bed, hercin lies the contrast and example to Ham. Moreover, when 'not' is joined to the copula, and a comma placed after it, the force of 'But' is felt, thus: True greatness is not (predicate), but it is this. Include the 'not' in the predicate, and 'But' becomes inconsequent: True greatness is (predicate), but it is this. Ca-fell perceived this, and added a second not as a compromise, embracing both readings: 'Is not, not to stir,' &c. Delius does not actually add the second not, but he says it is understood, or rather that the 'not' belongs to both copula and predicate. This discussion may seem trifling enough, but we must remember that: Rightly to punctuate is not, to put a stop without great argument, but greatly to find quarrel in a comma when Shakespeare's at the stake. Scene V.] MILES (p. 63): With this pomp and circumstance of Fortinbras and his army,—with this flash of a better fortune for Denmark athwart the deepening drama, the Act should end. Ending here, the interval consumed by the voyage to England, the return of Laër. from Paris, and the expedition of For. to Poland and back, is thrown between the Acts,—its natural place. This proposed extension of the Third Act would make this greatest of tragedies the most symmetrical too; while the Fourth Act, relieved of a confusion which is now mistaken for an anticlimax, would be devoted with a single purpose to its two superb contrasts: the revenge of Laër. with the revenge of Ham., and the utter madness of Oph. with the semi-counterfeit lunacy of her lover. A gain almost as great for the closet as for the stage.

Marshall (p. 77): The interval which elapses between this scene and the preceding is at least a month, and probably more. [Page 193.]—This may be seen by an examination of the remaining scenes. No break can occur at the end of this scene; the conversation between the King and Laër. in sc. vi is evidently part of that which ends this scene; the time occupied by sc. vi is merely sufficient for the King to explain to Laër. the circumstances of Polonius’s death. We find from sc. vi that Ham. has returned, having been taken by the pirates on his second day out; how long he was detained by them does not appear; it must have been for some time, since between Acts IV and V there cannot elapse much more than two days, and at the end of Act V we find ambassadors announcing the death of Ros. and Guil., and For. returned from Poland, so that it is evident that the break implied by a new Act ought to occur at the end of IV, iv. Moreover, if Ophelia’s madness were introduced at the beginning of a new Act, it would be more effective, and the interval which is supposed to have occurred would give color to the causes which produced it. [See notes on Act IV, p. 311.]

Enter Gentleman. [Collier: The omission in the FF of the Gentleman was, no doubt, to avoid the employment of another actor. Dyce: There is certainly room for suspecting that the omission of the ‘Gentleman’ is to be attributed to the players. But be that as it may, there can be no doubt that if a modern editor adheres to F., in this omission, he ought to restore to Hor. (what comes very awkwardly from the Queen) lines 14, 15; and that, whether he chooses to retain or omit the ‘Gentleman,’ he ought to make the Queen’s speech begin with line 16. White: I see no reason for deviating from F. Lines 14, 15 are much more appropriate in the Queen’s mouth, as a reflection by which she is led to change her determination with regard to Oph., than as a direct warning to a queen from a subject. Clarke: We think there is something exquisite in making Hamlet’s beloved friend Hor. the one who watches over and tenderly thinks for Oph. during the Prince’s absence, and brings her to his mother alone. Feeling thus, we believe it to have been Shakespeare’s reconsidered intention. Clarendon: Lines 11-13, so cautiously obscure, seem better suited to an ordinary courtier than to Hor.

Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. What would she have?

Gent. She speaks much of her father; says she hears
There's tricks i' the world; and hems and beats her heart;
Spurns enviously at straws; speaks things in doubt,
That carry but half sense; her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts;
Which, as her winks and nods and gestures yield them,
Indeed would make one think there might be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

12. thought] Staufeton: 'Thought' is possibly a misprint, caught from the line above, for meant, or seem, or a word of like import. Clarendon: The general sense of this ill-specified sentence is more easily understood than paraphrased. The speaker is afraid of committing himself to any definite statement. If he had spoken out he would have said: 'Her words and gestures lead one to infer that some great misfortune has happened to her.'
13. unhappily] Warburton: Though her meaning cannot be certainly collected, yet there is enough to put a mischievous interpretation to it. Steevens: That this word once signified mischievous is seen in Holland's Pliny's Nat. Hist. b. xiii, ch. vii: '—— the shrewd and unhappe soules which lie upon the lands, and eat up the seed new sowne.'

17–20. To...spilt] Collier: It deserves notice that these lines are marked with inverted commas in the Qq, not for the purpose of showing that the passage was a quotation, but apparently to enforce it as a maxim. It was not a very unusual practice. [See I, iii, 59, Knight's and Dyce's notes. Ed.]

18. amiss] Misfortune, disaster. For instances of its use as a substantive, see Nares, Steevens, and Concordance to Shakespeare's Poems.

19. jealousy] Claremont: Suspicion. Guilt is so full of suspicion that it unskilfully betrays itself in fearing to be betrayed.

20. Ophelia] Hunter (ii, 238): Perhaps the 'lute' of Qq was banished when line 21 was added, which must be said running wildly up to the Queen, when the lute would have been an incumbrance. Sir Joshua Reynolds: There is no part of this play in its representation on the stage, more pathetic than this scene; which, I suppose, proceeds from the utter insensibility Oph. has to her own misfortunes. A great sensibility, or none at all, seems to produce the same effect. In the latter the audience supply what she wants, and with the former they sympathize. Coleridge: Ophelia singing. O, note the conjunction here of these two thoughts that had never subsisted in disjunction, the love of Hamlet and her filial love, with the guileless floating on the surface of her pure imagination of the cautions so lately expressed, and the fears not too delicately avowed, by her father and brother, concerning the dangers to which her honor lay exposed. This play of association is instanced in lines 67, 68.

23. [Sings] Knight: The music still sung in the character of Oph. is supposed to be the same or nearly so that was used in Shakespeare's time, and thence transmitted to us by tradition. When Drury-lane Theatre was burnt in 1812, the copy of these songs shared the fate of the whole musical library. CHAFFELL (Popular Music of the Olden Time, vol. 1, p. 256): 'The late W. Linley (an accomplished amateur, and brother of the highly-gifted Mrs Sheridan) collected and published the wild and pathetic melodies of Oph., as he remembered them to have been exquisitely sung by Mrs Forster, when she was Miss Field, and belonged to Drury-lane Theatre;' and he says 'the impression remained too strong on his mind to make him doubt the correctness of the airs, agreeably to her delivery of them.' Dr Arnold also noted them down from the singing of Mrs Jordan. Mr Ayrton has followed that version in Knight's Shakespeare. The notes of the air to this first song of Ophelia's are the same in both; but in the former it is in three-quarter time, in the latter in common time. The melody is printed in common time in The Beggar's Opera (1728), to 'You'll think, e'er many days ensue,' and in The Generous Freemason, 1731. The following is the tune; but in singing Ophelia's fragments, each line should begin on the first of the bar, and not with the note before it. In the ballad-operas it has the burden, Twang, lang, dild do dee, at the end, with two additional bars of music:

Moderate time, and smoothly.

And how should I your true-love know From many another one? Oh, by his cockle-bat and staff, And by his sandal shoon. Twang, lang, dild do dee.

25. cockle-hat] Warburton: The description of a pilgrim. While this kind of devotion was in favor, love intrigues were carried on under this mask. Hence the old ballads and novels made pilgrimages the subjects of their plots. The cockle-shell hat was one of the essential badges of this vocation; for the chief places of devotion being beyond sea or on the coasts, the pilgrims were accustomed to put cockle-shells upon their hats, to denote the intention or performance of their devotion.

26. shoon] Delius: This form of the plural was archaic in Shakespeare's time. Else: It also occurs in 2 Hen. VI: IV, ii, 195.

outrage, and this was the primary and deepest impression on her lost mind; she felt that something more than the ceremonial forms, insisted on by Laer., was wanting.

probably was so. DYCE: That any one should fail at once to perceive that the with sweet flowers! And that any one should have the folly to suppose that the ballad now sung by Oph. must apply in minute particulars to her father! Enough for her that it is a ditty about death and burial; no matter that its hero is a youthful lover,—he was cut off by a sudden fate, and so far resembled Pol. Keightley:

Though the printers often omitted the negative (as once already in this play), they rarely added it. We have, however, an instance in Much Ado, III, ii, 28, and it might be better to suppose the same to be the case here.

41. daughter] Douce: This is a common story among the vulgar in Gloucestershire, and is thus related: 'Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough into the oven to bake for him, but was reprimanded by her daughter, who, insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size.
The dough, however, immediately afterwards began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out, "Heugh, heugh, heugh," which owl-like noise probably induced our Saviour for her wickedness to transform her into that bird.' This story is often related to children, in order to deter them from such illiberal behavior to poor people. Caldecott: The plumage of the melancholy bird, and the color of the baker, in correspondence with her father's 'white shroud,' and probably her own habit, may have suggested, to a bewildered mind, this singular allusion. Elze: As little did the baker's daughter expect to be turned into an owl as it occurred to my father and myself to anticipate the kind of death we should die. Doering (p. 79): Oph. feels that she has acted towards Ham. in an equally heartless manner.

43. conceit] Imagination. See III, iv, 114. Moberly: The King seems to catch only the word 'daughter,' and so misunderstands.

46. Strachey (p. 85): If we bear in mind the notorious fact that, in the dreadful visitation of mental derangement, delicate and refined women will use language so coarse that it is difficult to guess where they can ever have even heard such words, and certain that wherever heard they would have always lain, unknown of, and innoxious, in the mind, unless the hot-bed of mental fever had quickened them for the first time into life;—if we remember this fact, and couple it with the consideration that the infant ears of the motherless Ophelia might have heard the talk and the songs of such a nurse as that of Juliet, we shall find nothing improbable, nor even unseemly, in the poor girl’s songs—not only nothing to disturb our faith in the unsullied purity of her maiden mind, but nothing to cloud the bright beauty of that purity with even the slightest passing breath. [Mrs Jameson was, I think, the first to suggest that Oph. may have been sung to sleep in infancy by snatches of old ballads such as these, and Mrs Cowden Clarke has carried out the idea in her story of The Rose of Elsinore, where Botilda, the nurse, is scolded for singing this song to her infant charge.] Hudson (Shakespeare: His Life, Art, &c., Boston, 1872, ii, 281): The immodesty of some of these songs is surpassingly touching; it tells us, as nothing else could, that Oph. is utterly unconscious of what she is saying.

46. [Singa] Chappell (Popular Music of the 'Olten Time,' vol. i, p. 227): This song is found in several of the ballad-operas, such as The Cobblers' Opera (1729), the Quaker's Opera (1728), &c. In Pills to purge Melancholy (1707), ii, 44 it is printed to a song in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, beginning, 'Arise, arise, my juggy, my puppy.' Other versions will be found under the name of 'Who list to lead a soldier's life?' and 'Lord Thomas and Fair Ellinor.'

Cheerfully.

Good morrow, 'tis St Valentine's day, All in the morning betime,

And I a maid at your window To be your Valentine.

46. Saint Valentine's day] Halliwell: This song alludes to the custom of the first girl seen by a man on the morning of this day being considered his Valentine or true-love. The custom continued until the last century, and is graphically alluded to by Gay. The custom of the different sexes choosing themselves mates on St Valentine's day, 14th February, the names being selected either by lots or methods of divination, is of great antiquity in England. The name so drawn was the Valentine of the drawer. Douce traces the custom to the Lupercalis of Rome, during which Then up he rose, and donn'd his clothes,
And dipp'd the chamber door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.

a similar custom prevailed. There is nothing in the life of the Saint himself which can authorize such a practice, and his day was merely selected as most fit in point of time whereon to engraft a Christian festival. It was also believed that on this day birds chose their mates. Pepys gives some quaint notices of 'Valentines' in his Diary under date 14th and 16th Feb., 1666, and 14th and 18th Feb., 1667.

51. dipp'd] Wedgwood: To do up, as daff and dem, to do off and do on.

52, 53. Let ... more.] Douce found a French ballad of 1598, of which the conclusion runs thus: 'Elle y entra pucelle, Grossette elle en sorta.'

56-58. A continuation of the same song.

56. Gis] Johnson: Rather, 'By Gis,' i.e. By St Cecily. Ridley: There is not the least mention of any Saint whose name corresponds with this, in either the Roman Calendar, the service in Utsum Sarum, or in the Benedictory of Bishop Athelwold. I believe the word to be only a corrupted abbreviation of 'Jesu,' the letters J. H. S. being antecently all that was set down to denote that sacred name, on altars, the covers of books, &c. Ritson: Though Gis may be, and I believe is, only a contraction of 'Jesu,' there is certainly a Saint Gislen, with whose name it corresponds. Douce: Ridley's conjecture is the true one; but the corruption is not in the way he has stated. The letters I H S would not be pronounced Gis, even by those who understood them as a Greek contraction.

56. Saint Charity] Steevens: This is a known saint among the Roman Catholics. Spenser mentions her, Eclog. V, 255.

59. Cock] Dyce (Glos.): A corruption, or euphemism, for God. This irreverent alteration of the sacred name was formerly very common; it occurs at least

Thus, in Beau. & Fl. The Double Marriage. IV, ii, 6: 'A father's curses... like a murdering-piece, aim not at one, But all that stand within the dangerous level.' Singer: A murdering-piece, or murderer, was a small piece of artillery; in Fr. meurtrière, which took its name from the loopholes and embrasures in towers and fortifications, that were so called. 'Meurtrière, c'est un petit canonnière comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appelée, parce que tirant par icelle a desceu, ceux ausquels on tire sont facilement meurtri.'—Nicot. 118. person] Delius: It is to be inferred that the Queen throws herself between her husband and the enraged Laer. Clarend. She clings round the latter to prevent him from striking. [See Dr Johnson's stage-direction, Textual Notes, line 112.]

119–121. There's . . . will] Coleridge: Proof, as indeed all else is, that Sh never intended us to see the King with Hamlet's eyes; though, I suspect, the man agers have long done so.

119. divinity] Boswell: In Chettle's Englandes Mourning Garment is the fol lowing anecdote of Queen Elizabeth: While her Majesty was on the river near Greenwich, a shot was fired by accident, which struck the royal barge, and hurt a waterman near her. 'The French ambassador being amazed, and all crying Treason, Treason! yet she, with an undaunted spirit, came to the open place of the barge, and had them never feare, for if the shot were made at her, they durst not shoot againe: such majestie had her presence, and such boldnesse her heart, that she despired all feare, and was, as all princes are or should be, so full of divine fullnesse, that guiltie mortalitie durst not beholde her but with dazzled eyes.'

119. hedge] Coldeccott: See Job, i, 10; and iii, 23.

120, 121. That . . . will] Staunton: This is passed by the critics without comment; but we shrewdly suspect it has undergone some depravation at the hands of transcribers or compositors.

Speak, man.

Laer. Where's my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled with.

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!

Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit!

Most throughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world;

And for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

124. Theobald gives this note of Warburton's, which, not being in Warburton's own edition, was probably a MS communication: Laertes is a good character. But being in rebellion, Sh. avoids any appearance of sanctioning such conduct by putting into his mouth absurd and blasphemous sentiments, which excite nothing but horror at his actions. The jealousy of the two reigns in which Sh. wrote would not dispense with less exactness. Coleridge: Mercy on Warburton's notion of goodness! Please refer to the seventh scene of this Act. Yet I acknowledge that Sh. evidently wishes, as much as possible, to spare the character of Laer.—to break the extreme turpitude of his consent to become an agent and accomplice of the King's treachery; and to this end he re-introduces Oph. at the close of this scene to afford a probable stimulus of passion in her brother.

130. world] Clarendon: This world and the next. See Mac. III, ii, 16, where it means the terrestrial and the celestial worlds.

sent her most precious senses after the object of her inflamed affection. Warburton: The cause of Ophelia's madness was grief, occasioned by the violence of her natural affection for her murdered father; her brother, therefore, with great force of expression, says: 'Nature is fall'n in love, and where 'tis fall'n.' [Thus Warburton's text.] To distinguish the passion of natural affection from the passion of love between the two sexes, i.e., Nature, or natural affection is fall'n in love. Johnson: These lines might have been omitted in the Folio without great loss, for they are obscure and affected; but, I think, they require no emendation. Love (says Laertes) is the passion by which nature is most exalted and refined; and as substances, refined and subtilised, easily obey any impulse, or follow any attraction, some part of nature, so purified and refined, flies off after the attracting object, after the thing it loves. Clarendon: 'Fine' seems to mean 'delicately tender,' and 'instance' 'proof' or 'example.' 'The thing it loves' is here Polonius; the 'precious instance,' Ophelia's natural soundness of mind. Her sanity has followed her father to the grave. Collier (ed. 2): Lines 152-155 are struck through with a pen in the (MS), probably because they were not understood.

165. move] WALKER (Crit. ii, 261) ‘Move me thus;’ at least I am all but sure that this is the true reading.

166, 167. Down . . . . a-down-a] MALONE: Florio gives: Filibustachina, the burden of a country song, as we say hay downe a downe downa. DYCE: Whether these words are rightly given I cannot determine. (On the modern stage they are sung by Oph.) CAMBRIDGE EDITORS (Note xxviii): The late Mr John Taylor, in a copy of the Var. 1813 now in the Library of Trin. Coll., Cambridge, has made the following note: ‘Oph. gives the song without the Burthen first, and then she instructs them, “You must sing a-down a-down, and you (speaking to another) call him a-down-a.”’

167. wheel] WARBURTON: We should read weal. She is now rambling on the ballad of the steward and his lord’s daughter; and in these words speaks of the state he assumed. HEATH: Possibly by ‘wheel’ is here meant the burden of the ballad. DYCE (Glos.) says that ‘most critics seem now to agree with Steevens [sic] in’ thus referring it to the burden or refrain; but CLARENDON asserts that no satisfactory example has been found of the word in this sense. STEEVENS cites a very apropos illustration ‘from memory, from a book of which’ he could not recollect the exact title or date; unfortunately when Steevens does not adduce line, page, and title, his illustrations are to be received with caution; his wit was too ready at a pinch, and the simple reference to a ‘black-letter quarto in my possession’ was convenient, much like Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Play.’ The illustration in question (which has been repeated by several edd. since his day) is as follows: ‘The song was accounted a good one, thoug it was not moche graced by the wheels, which in no wise accorded with the subject-matter thereof.’ A conclusive quotation, if —.

Steevens adds that ‘Rota’ is the ancient musical term in Latin for the burden of a song. JOHNSON suggests: ‘perhaps the lady stolen by the steward was reduced to spin?’ MALONE divests this suggestion of its tragic element by supposing that the wheel is here used in its ordinary sense, and that these words refer to the occupation of the girl who is supposed to sing the song alluded to by Oph. STAUNTON says it was, perhaps, the practice on the old stage for Oph. to play the ‘wheel,’ i.e. the refrain, upon her lute before these words. [If ‘wheel’ ever meant refrain, the meaning apparently had become obsolete when F was printed. Ed.]

168. steward] COLLIER: No such ballad is known. MORELY: By the false steward stealing his master’s daughter she may mean that the rollicking chorus, instead of aiding the sense, steals away all its pathos and dirge-like character.

170. rosemary] See Rom. & Jul. IV, v, 79, and notes. Hunter (ii, 259): The mind of Oph. is thrown off its poise by the shock which she had received; she thinks of marriage: with that comes the idea of rosemary, the sweet-scented rosemary, and she addresses him who should have been the bridegroom, Ham. himself, as her 'love.' She then feels her disappointment. Ham. is not there, and she turns to another flower wrought up in her wild attire, pansies, as more fitting her condition,—a flower connected with melancholy, then often called thought, and taking its name from it. 'There's a daisy; I would give you some violets, but,' &c. When the mind is unsettled, it is usual for some idea to recur which has been introduced at a critical period of the person's life. Now, when Lear was warning Oph. against encouraging the attentions of Ham., he urged her to consider his tripping but as 'A violet in the youth of primy nature.' These words had remained imprinted on her mind, associated with the idea of Ham. and the idea of her brother, and they now recur to her memory when she again converses with her brother on the same unhappy subject. The violets withered when her father died. When Ham. had slain Pol. there was a final obstacle interposed to their union. Staunton: There is method in poor Ophelia's distribution. She presents to each the herb popularly appropriate to his age or disposition. To Lear., whom in her distraction she probably confounds with her lover, she gives 'rosemary' as an emblem of his faithful remembrance; and 'pansies' to denote love's 'thoughts' or troubles. Delius: Probably these flowers existed only in Ophelia's fantasy, and there was no distribution of real flowers to the persons present.

171. pansies] Johnson: 'For thoughts, because of its name, pensées.' In N. & Qu., 22 Oct. 1864, Fabius Oxoniensis gives a number of the names by which this flower is known among rustics and old writers; see also Beisly (Sh. Garden, p. 156).
173. document] Edinburgh Review (Shakespearean Glossaries, July, 1869): This word is here used in its earlier and etymological sense of instruction, lesson, teaching. This early signification is well illustrated in the Fairy Queen [1, 10, 19—Clarendon], 'her sacred booke . . . . She unto him disclosed every whit, And heavenly documents theerout did preach.' The word was habitually used in this sense in Shakespeare's day, but has now wholly lost its primitiv signification, and is restricted to its secondary sense of written precepts, instructions, and evidences. Clarendon: Cotgrave gives 'Document: m. A document, precept; instruction, admonition; experiment, example.'

175. fennel] Malone: Oph. gives her fennel and columbines to the King. In A Handfull of Pleasant Delites, 1584, the former is thus mentioned: 'Fennel is for flatterers,' &c. See also Florio: Dare finocchio, to give fennell . . . . to flatter, to rue for you; and here's some for me; we may call it herb 176 of grace o' Sundays; oh, you must wear your rue with a

Whitehouse, Nares: This was generally considered an inflammatory herb, and was certainly emblematic of flattery. [Several instances are given.] Staunton: For the King she has ‘fennel,’ signifying ‘flattery’ and ‘lust;’ and ‘columbines,’ which marked ingratitude. Dyce (Glos.): We may certainly suppose that she offers the King ‘flattery,’ though we do not agree with Staunton in supposing that here fennel signifies ‘lust’ also. Brissly (p. 157) cites Holland’s Pliny [p. 77, ed. 1635]: ‘Fennel hath a singular property to mundifie our sight, and tak: away the filme or web that overcasteth and dimmeth our eyes.’ This property is noticed by most of our early writers on plants, and it is in reference to this quality that Oph. presents it to the King to clear his sight, just as the rosemary was given to Laer. to aid his memory.

175. columbines] Steevens: In All Fools, by Chapman, 1605: ‘a columbine? No; that thankless flower fits not my garden.’—II, i. Gerard and other herbalists impute few, if any, virtues to them; and they may therefore be styled thankless, because they appear to make no grateful return for their creation. S[TPHEN] W[ESTON]: Columbine was an emblem of cuckoldom of the horns of its nectaribus, which are remarkable in this plant. Holt White: It was also emblematic of forsaken lovers: ‘The columbine in tawny often taken Is then ascribed to such as are forsaken.’—Browne’s Britannia’s Pastorals, b. i, song ii, 1613. Dyce (Glos.): But here Oph. is not assigning the columbine to herself, and, except herself, there is no ‘love-lorn’ person present.

176, 177. rue . . . Sundays] Warburton: The reason why ‘rue’ was called ‘herb of grace’ is because that herb was a principal ingredient in the potion which the Romish priests used to force the possessed to swallow when they exercised them. These exorcisms being performed generally on a Sunday, in church before the whole congregation, is the reason why she says we call it ‘herb of grace o’ Sundays.’ [Dyce says Warburton was only repeating what he had read in the works of a great divine,—Jeremy Taylor; see T[ODD] POST.] Steevens: I believe there is a quibble meant in this passage; ‘rue’ ancienly signifying the same as ruth, i.e. sorrow. Oph. gives the Queen some, and keeps a proportion of it for herself. There is the same kind of play with the same word in Rich. II: III, iv, 104. ‘Herb of grace’ is one of the titles which Tucca gives to William Rufus, in Decker’s Satiromastix. I suppose the first syllable of the surname Rufus introduced the quibble. Henley: The following passage from Greene’s Quip for an Upstart Courtier will furnish the best reason for calling rue herb of grace o’ Sundays: ‘—some of them smil’d and said, Rue was called Herbegrace, which, though they scorned in their youth, they might wear in their age, and that it was never too late to say Miseree.’ Malone: ‘Herb of grace’ was not the Sunday name, but the every-day name of ‘rue.’ In the common dictionaries of Shakespeare’s time it is called ‘herb of grace.’ See Florio s. v. Rute, and Cotgrave s. v. Rue. There is no ground, therefore, for sup-difference. There’s a daisy; I would give you some violets, but they withered all when my father died; they say he made a good end.—

posing with Warburton that ‘rue’ was called ‘herb of grace’ from its being used in exorcisms performed in churches on Sundays. Oph. only means, I think, that the Queen may with peculiar propriety on Sundays, when she solicits pardon for that crime which she has so much occasion to rue and repent of, call her ‘rue’ ‘herb of grace.’ After having given the Queen ‘rue,’ to remind her of the sorrow and contrition she ought to feel for her incestuous marriage, Oph. tells her she may wear it with a difference, to distinguish it from that worn by Oph. herself; because her tears flowed from the loss of a father, those of the Queen ought to flow for her guilt.
TODD (ap. Caldecott) cites Jeremy Taylor’s _A Dissuasive from Popery_, Part I, ch.
ii, sect. ix: ‘They [the Romish exorcists] are to try the devil by holy water, incense, sulphur, rue; which from thence, as we suppose, came to be called herb of grace.’
CALDECOTT cites a passage from Edward Alleyn’s letters [Var. 1821, vol. xxxi, p. 390, and _Sh. Soc._ vol. ix, p. 46], which seems to imply that ‘herb of grace’ and ‘rue’ were different plants: ‘Every evening’ [Alleyn is telling his wife, whom he calls ‘good sweete mouse,’ to take precautions against the plague raging that year, 1593, in London] ‘throwe water before your dore and in your bake sid, and have in your windowes good store of reue and herbe of grace.’ That this ‘herb of grace’ was wormwood Malone shows by referring to the reply from Alleyn’s parents to this letter: ‘for your good counsell . . . . we all thank you, which wasse for keeping of our howse cleane . . . . and strainge our windowes with wormwode and rew.’

178. difference] STEEVENS: This seems to refer to the rules of heraldry, where the younger brothers of a family bear the same arms with a difference, or mark of distinction. So, in Holinshed’s _Reign of King Richard II_, p. 443: ‘—because he was the youngest of the Spencers, he bare a border gules for a difference.’ There may, however, be somewhat more implied here than is expressed. You, madam (says Oph. to the Queen), may call your _rue_ by its Sunday name, _herb of grace_, and so wear it with a difference to distinguish it from mine, which can never be anything but merely _rue_, _i.e._ sorrow. CALDECOTT: Between the ruth and wretchedness of guilt, and the ruth and sorrows of misfortune, it would be no difficult matter to distinguish. SKEAT (N. & Qu., 25 Dec. 1869): There is no difficulty here if we do not force the words into some heraldic phrase. It merely means this: I offer you rue, which has two meanings; it is sometimes called _herb of grace_, and in that sense
I take some for myself; but with a slight difference of spelling it means _ruth_, and in that respect it will do for you. This explanation is not mine,—it is Shakespeare’s own; see _Ric. II:_ III, iv, 105, 106. [A discussion on the meaning of this phrase is also to be found in _Edin. Rev._ July, 1869; _N. & Qu._ 25 Sept. 1869; 23 Oct.
1869, and 8 Jan. 1870.]

178. daisy] HENLEY: Greene, in his _Quip for an Upstart Courtier_, has explained the significance of this flower: ‘—Next them grew the dissembling daisie, to warne such light-of-love _wet_hes not to trust every faire promise that such amorous bachemanuscripts and printed books. There are two copies in William Ballet's Lute fore, probably the tune of a ballad of Robin Hood, now lost. In Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen, II, i, the jailer's daughter, being mad, says, 'I can sing twenty more.

... I can sing The Broom and Bonny Robin.' In Robinson's Schoole of Mustouching prayer, Oph. goes to meet her death. It displays admirably her simple and loving spirit, and seems to be a protest beforehand against the hard-hearted law which hinders her having the full Christian burial-rites.

nounced as anciently spelt, is still in frequent provincial use. So, in The Last with the ship boat to common or sign with them.' Again, in Holinshed's account of Jack Cade's insurrection: '— to whom were sent from the king the archbishop, &c., to common with him of his grieves and requests.' BOSWELL: Surely the word common in F₅ means, I must be allowed to participate in your grief, to feel in common with you. [GRANT WHITE, in his excellent Sh. Scholar, p. 421, was beguiled by the homely strength of the F₅ text into approval of Boswell's interpretation of it, much to Dyce's surprise,' who pronounced it 'most erroneous'; the two words, common and 'commune,' are mere variations in spelling of the same word; they were both accented alike, on the first syllable,—as Grant White afterwards remarked in his edition. And HUDSON says Milton so accents 'commune,' and so also even Wordsworth. ED.]

Hor. [Reads] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; in the scuffle I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. 19. what they did] MILLES (p. 70) maintains that this capture was not accidental, but was pre-arranged by Ham., who hints at it when he says to the King (IV, iii, 47), 'I see a cherub that sees them,' but alludes to it most positively and specifically at 30.

did; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou would'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England; of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, HAMLET.

the close of the interview with his mother: ‘O ‘tis most sweet When in one line two crafts directly meet.’—‘If the word crafts had its present maritime significance in Shakespeare's time, the pun alone is conclusive of a pre-arranged capture. How arranged is neither here nor there; but opportunities of chartering a free cruiser could not have been wanting to a prince of Denmark, and, what is more significant, the fleet of Fortinbras was then in port at Elsinor. There is an understanding, just ever so vaguely glanced at, between the two young princes. But the following lines admit of but one interpretation: “Let it work; For ‘tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petar; and ‘t shall go hard But I will delve one yard below their mines And blow them at the moon!” One would think it required a miraculous allowance of critical obtuseness to ignore a counterplot so strikingly pre-announced... To make assurance doubly sure, comes the letter to Hor., “In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did.” Can circumstantial proof go farther? Could any ten men of sense, on such a record, acquit Ham. of being an accessory before, as well as after the fact?”[See Snider, Appendix, Vol. II, p. 183.]

28. clarke: This simple yet strong conclusion to his sedate but most earnest letter to his bosom-friend might, we think, fully serve to denote Hamlet’s perfect sanity. Madmen do not write in a style thus condensed and pertinent; if they are warm they are violent, if they are fervent they are excited; but here is warmth of friendship with staid expression, fervour of feeling with sobriety of assurance.

"gyves," but in 'graces.' How can corporeal 'gyves' be converted into incorporeal, abstract 'graces'? That is more than even the well at Knaresborough could do. An abstract noun in this connection ruins the whole metaphor, and is illogical. If we substitute some abstract noun for 'gyves,' while restoring logical propriety, we deprive the simile of all significant clearness, force, and depth, and to introduce the wonder-working spring in order to compare together two abstract qualities would be pointless, and assuredly not in accordance with Shakespeare's genius and style. Read, therefore: gravés. Graves, now spelled grave's, is found also in 2 Hen. IV. IV, iv, 50, where, as here, something mean becomes ennobled. For the spelling, compare 'thraves,' instead of 'thieves' (Chapman's Iliad, xi, 477); and 'stale,' instead of 'steale' or 'stole' (Ib. iv, 173). STRATMANN praises this emendation of Elze's as judicious.

22. JENNENS finds the reading of the F. so unnatural and impossible that he adopts that of Q.Q.s, reading so loved, arm'd, and paraphrases, 'Too slightly timbered for one so loved and armed with the affections and veneration of the people.' The armes of Q. are put for the person armed, and the love applied to them which is meant for him. In both these readings we have the idea of a suit of armor reverberating an arrow back to its bow, which is not only possible, but just. STEEVES: The reading of the F., however, is supported by Ascham's Toxophilus: 'Weake bowes, and lyghte shaftes can not stande in a rough wynde.' [p. 151, ed. Arber.]

25, 26. have ... driven] ABBOTT, § 425: Here note that though the first line could be re-transposed, and Lær. could naturally say, 'I have lost a father,' on the other hand he could not say, 'I have driven a sister,' without completely changing the sense. 'Have' is here used in its original sense, and is equivalent to 'I find.' When 'have' is thus used without any notion of action, it is separated from the participle passive. See I, ii, 215; III, iii, 38.

27. praises] JOHNSON: If I may praise what has been, but is now to be found no more.

28. on mount] CALDECOTT: On the highest ground, in the fullest presence of the age, to give a general challenge in support of her excellence. [I think Caldecott failed to see that 'of all the age' qualifies 'challenger.' Her worth challenged
For her perfections. But my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that; you must not think all the age to deny her perfection. Ed.] COLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) reads sole challenger. MOBERLY: The allusion seems to be the coronation ceremony of the Emperor of Germany [Austria?] as King of Hungary; when on the Mount of Deference, at Presburg, he unsheathes the ancient sword of state, and shaking it towards North, South, East, and West, challenges the four corners of the world to dispute his rights.

30. sleeps] See I, i, 173. DYCK quotes from Phaer’s Virgil, Æneidos, ii: ‘The towne. . . . in sleepe[s] [the original somme] and drinking drownd;’ and refers to a Æne. IV: IV, v, 69, where he also reads ‘sleeps.’

    (Ex-pander, p. 295): It is manifest that but or not has been omitted. [Keightley reads ‘should it but’ in his text.] CLARENDON: Perhaps the first clause refers to Hamlet’s return, the second to Laertes’s feelings. MARSHALL (p. 197): If the ‘should’ were italicised we might make sense of it, thus: ‘If it be so’—(i.e. if Ham.
    has come back because, on consideration, he did not choose to go to England)—‘As how should it be so?’ (i.e. how should there be any question about it being so?)— ‘How (could it be) otherwise?’ I admit that in this case we should expect ‘if’
    to be repeated.
60. Will...me?] WHITE: The most un-Shakespearian want of accord between the rhythm and the sense of this hemistich,—the accent being thrown upon ‘by’ instead of ‘me’,—warrants the opinion that the intelligent correction in the Folio is by authority. [It is to be borne in mind that White supposes ‘ruled’ is to be pronounced as a dissyllable. In his text he prints ‘ru’d,’ and, following the Ff, omits ‘Ay, my lord.’ Ed.]
60. my lord] WALKER (Crit. iii, 270): Perhaps ‘my good lord.’

plethory. But I observe the dramatic writers of that time frequently call a fulness of blood a plurisy, as if it came not from πλέον, but from plus, pluris. [This emendation Warburton communicated by letter to Theobald, who replied that it had also occurred to him, but that he was doubtful of it, partly from 'the accentual syllable falling so wrong in the verse, the e being long' [here Theobald's Greek misled him], and partly because Sh. might have mistaken the nature of pleurisy, as Beau & Fl. seem to have done: 'those too many excellencies, that feed Your pride, turn to a plurisy.'—Custom of the Country [II, i, p. 417, ed. Dyce]. In his edition Theobald added: 'thou grand decider... that heal'st The earth when it is sick, and cur'st the world O' the pleurisy of people.'—Two Noble Kinsmen [V, i, p. 417, ed. Dyce].
Tollet, in the Var. 1821, cites: Mascal's Treatise on Cattle, 1662, p. 187, 'Against the blood, or plurisie of blood. The disease of blood is, some young horses will feed, and being fat will increase blood, and so grow to a plurisie, and die.'—Malone cites: 'Must your hot itch and plurisy of lust... be fed Up to a surfeit.'—The Pity She's a Whore, IV, iii [Ford's Works, p. 177, ed. Dyce]. Other instances are given by M. Mason and Nares, in all of which the word is spelled 'plurisy,' and means a surfeit, a plethory. Whence Nares affirms that it means 'a plethory or redundancy of blood. Not the same as plurisy, but derived from plus, pluris, more.' And Nares is followed in the derivation from plus, pluris, by Dyce, Collie, Staunton, White, and Hudson. Gifford also explains: 'Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill' (Massingber's Unnatural Combat, IV, i, p. 196, ed. Gifford) by 'thy superabundance of goodness: the thought is from Sh.,' and cites the present passage from Hamlet. Coleridge, in his Notes, says, 'I rather think that Sh. meant pleurisy, but involved in it the thought of plethora, as supposing pleurisy to arise from too much blood; otherwise I can not explain 'this 'should' is like a spendthrift sigh That hurts by eating.' In a stitch in the side every one must have heaved a sigh that 'hurt by eating.' Since writing the above I feel confirmed that 'pleurisy' is the right word; for I find that in the old medical dictionaries the pleurisy is often called the 'plethory.' In fine, Sh. and the early dramatists were misled by the sound into supposing that pleurisy was the same as plethory, and it was accordingly spelled 'plurisy,' as indicating the symptoms implied in its supposed derivation from plus, pluris. It is better to retain that spelling, although there is no disease, I believe, so named, or rather so spelled, at present. Ed.]

120. should... would] See I, v, 32; III, iii, 75; Macb. I, v, 19, and III, vi, 19.

128. spendthrift sigh] WARBURTON: This nonsense should be read 'a spendthrift's sigh,' i.e. though a spendthrift's entering into bonds or mortgages gives him a present relief from his straits, yet it ends in much greater distresses. HEATH: This refers to a very idle opinion, still prevalent among the common people, that every sigh draws drops of blood from the heart and tends to shorten life. COT COTT cites DR SHERWIN: To have conceived, previous to the discovery of the circulation of the blood, that sighing sucked the blood, was an idea natural enough for after, or rather during, a deep sigh the blood flows more freely through the pulmonary artery and its ramifications in the different lobes of the lungs; and it might have appeared to the old physiologists to be thus drawn away from the heart and the general mass into the lungs. How it got back again into the heart, they did not know. CLARENDON: The meaning is that the mere recognition of a duty without the will to perform it, while it satisfies for a moment, enfeebles the moral nature. We have the same notion of sighs wasting the vital powers in 2 Hen. VI: III, ii, 63; Mid. N. D., III, ii, 97. [See Rom. & Jul. III, v, 58.] MOBERLY: He who vainly acknowledges that he 'should' have done a thing is like a spendthrift sighing for his squandered estate.

128. sanctuarize] CLARENDON: This verb is probably invented by Sh. No place should protect murder (such as that which Ham. has perpetrated) from punishment. Compare Rich. III III, i, 42; Cor. I, x, 19.

Two years before Pope’s second edition was published in 1728, Theobald, in his Sh. Restored, p. 119, in a note on this passage had conjectured imbafted, and also on the same page suggested ‘imbafted’ and envenom’d for ‘unbatred and envenom’d,’ V, ii, 304. Hence arose, probably, Pope’s error. Theobald, in the Appendix, p. 192, withdrew these conjectures, and supposes that ‘unbatred’ may here mean unbatred, or not robbed of its point; nor, he adds, can the conjecture hold in the second passage without tautology, because ‘envenom’d’ signifies the same as inbafted. ED.

which is used by Sh., as e.g. Jul. Cæs. III, ii, 96: 'When that the poor have

Hunter (ii, 260): There is little in our poet's writings more painful than such a scene as this; the cool deliberation with which Laer. comes into such a plot is so inconsistent with his character as exhibited in the other parts of the play; the clumsiness of the whole contrivance, and the barefaced manner in which the King is made to expose his villainous purpose to one who is already half his enemy, that one is tempted to ask where the mighty spirit is fled which dictated some portions of this most unequal performance. What an abandonment also of the great design of the tragedy (as announced in the First Act), that there should be a train laid which is to bring about the catastrophe while the principal actor is not cognizant of it, and has, of course, no part in it. The death of the King is in consequence brought about without that intention of the mind of Ham. which was necessary to connect it with the early scenes of the play, and to give dignity to the great catastrophe.

163. noise JENKINS finds great significance in these words, as an expression of the King's guilt, and fear of being overheard.

165. STEEVES: Compare Per. I, iv, 63. Ritson calls attention to a similar thought in Locrins, one of the Spurious Plays, first published in 1595. Sabren drowns herself, and Queen Gwendoline exclaims: 'One mischief follows another's neck.' [So it reads in the last column of the last page of F4.]

168. Thomas Campbell [?] (Blackwood's Mag. March, 1833): The Queen was affected after a fashion by the picturesque mode of Ophelia's death, and takes more pleasure in describing it than any one would who really had a heart. Gertrude was a gossip,—and she is gross even in her grief.

168. hoar HUNTER (ii, 261): She resorted to the willow 'to make her a garland, as being forsaken,' as Benedick says of the Count.

168. aslant COLLIER: Ascanut has nearly the same meaning as aslant. BEISLEY (p. 159): This willow, the Salix alba, grows on the banks of most of our small streams, particularly the Avon, near Stratford, and from the looseness of the soil the trees partly lose their hold, and bend 'aslant' over the stream.

169. hoary CLARKE: Willow leaves are green on the upper side, but silvery-grey, or hoary, on the under side, which it shows in the glassy stream. CLARENDON: Compare Virgil, Georgics, ii, 13: 'Glaucus canaetis fronde salicia.' LOWELL (Among My Books, p. 185): Sh. understood perfectly the charm of indirectness, of making his readers seem to discover for themselves what he means to show them. 170. come] JENNENS interprets the Qq: With the willow she made a garland, and stuck flowers in it. KNIGHT says: To 'make,' of the Qq, here means to 'come,' to 'make way,' to 'proceed.'

171. FARREN (Mania and Madness, &c., p. 62): This line is an exquisite specimen of emblematic or picture-writing. The 'crow-flower,' according to Parkinson, was called The faire Mayde of France; the 'long purples' are dead men's fingers; the 'daisy' imports pure virginity or spring of life, as being itself 'the virgin bloom of the year.' The order runs thus, with the meaning of each flower beneath:

Crow-flowers, Nettles, Daisies, Long Purples.

Fayre Mayde { stung to the quick, virgin cold hand

A fair maid stung to the quick, her virgin bloom under the cold hand of death.'

BEISLEY (p. 159): 'Crow-flowers' are the bulbous crowfoot, Ranunculus bulbosus, and the meadow crowfoot, R. acris. The most common 'nettles' which blossom early are the white dead-nettle, Lamium album, and the purple dead-nettle, L. purpureum. 'Daisy,' Bellis perennis; the only British species, blossoms all the year, and is one of the earliest flowers of spring.

171. long purples] STEVENS: In Lyte's Herbal, 1578, its various names, too gross for repetition, are preserved. MALONE: One of the grosser names Gertrude had a particular reason to avoid,—the rampant widow. BEISLEY (p. 160): This is the early purple orchis, Orchis mascula, which blossoms in April and May. The 'cold maids' mistook one of the other orchids, having palmed roots, for 'long purples.' The spotted palmate orchis, Orchis maculata, and the marsh orchis, O. latifolia, have palmed roots, and are called 'dead men's fingers,' which they somewhat resemble. 179. tunes] JENNENS: The reading, 'tunes,' of the Ff is vague, while lauds of the Qq, i.e. hymns or psalms, tells us just what kind of music she died singing.
SINGER: Lauds were so called from the psalm Laudate Dominum. WHITE: Lauds of the Qq is a word singularly inappropriate here. HUDSON: Lauds might well be preferred, as agreeing better with chanted, and as conveying a touch of pathos which 'tunes' does not quite reach.

180. incapable] MALONE: Having no understanding or knowledge. See 'capable,' III, ii, 11; III, iv, 127. RITSON: That is, insensible. CALDECOTT: Thus: 'conducted into the great hall of the gods, Mercury sprinkled me with water, which made me capable of their divine presence.'—Greene's Orpharion, 1599.

181. native] See I, ii, 47.

181. induced] MASON: We should read either indued or induced. Sh. seems to have forgotten himself in this scene, as there is not a single circumstance in this relation which implies that Oph. had drowned herself intentionally. MALONE: 'Indued' is clothed, endowed, or furnished with properties suited to the element of water. Our old writers used induced and endowed indiscriminately.

know what passed in the mind of Oph. when she placed herself in so perilous a situation. After the facts had been weighed and considered, the priest in the next Act pronounces that her death was doubtful. Seymour (ii, 197): As the Queen seems to give this description from ocular knowledge, it may be asked why, apprised as she was of Ophelia’s distraction, she did not take steps to prevent the fatal catastrophe, especially as there was so fair an opportunity of saving her while she was, by her clothes, borne ‘mermaidlike-up,’ and the Queen was at leisure to hear her ‘chanting old tunes.’ T. C. [Thomas Campbell?] (Blackwood’s Maga., Feb. 1818, p. 511): Perhaps this description by the Queen is poetical rather than dramatic; but its exquisite beauty prevails, and Oph., dying and dead, is still the same Oph. that first won our love. Perhaps the very forgetfulness of her throughout the remainder of the play, leaves the soul at full liberty to dream of the departed. She has passed away from the earth like a beautiful air,—a delightful dream. There would have been no place for her in the agitation and tempest of the final catastrophe. We are satisfied that she is in her grave. And in place of beholding her involved in the shocking troubles of the closing scene, we remember that her heart lies at rest, and the remembrance is like the returning voice of melancholy music. Hudson: This passage is deservedly celebrated, and aptly illustrates the Poet’s power of making the description of a thing better than the thing itself, by giving us his eyes to see it with. Clarendon: This speech of the Queen is certainly unworthy of its author and of the occasion. The enumeration of plants is quite as unsuitable to so tragical a scene as the description of the Dover cliff, in Lear, iv, vi, 11-24. Besides, there was no one by to witness the death of Oph., else she would have been rescued.

185. drown’d?] Corsen: It would appear from the Queen’s reply that Laertes’s speech must have been meant to be interrogative. If exclamatory, the iteration thereupon of the Queen, ‘Drown’d, drown’d,’ is almost ludicrous, and makes one feel that the poor girl has had indeed, as Laer. says in the next speech, ‘too much of water.’

186. drown’d?] Warburton: Beau. & Fl. ridicule this passage: ‘I will run mad first, and if that get not pity, I’ll drown myself to a most dismal ditty.’—The Scornfull Lady, III, ii, p. 68, ed. Dyce. Elze finds another allusion to this passage in the same play of The Scornfull Lady, II, iii, p. 41: ‘Drown’d, drown’d at sea.’ [But this allusion is doubtful; the plot hinges on the supposed drowning at sea of the hero, and such a phrase could hardly be avoided. There are, however, undoubtedly other allusions to Hamlet elsewhere in the play. Ed.]

189. trick] Caldecott: Our habit, a property that makes a part of us. Clarendon: See All’s Well, III, ii, 9; Love’s Lab. V, ii, 416. [Lear, IV, vi, 105.]

Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight; the crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

First Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?

Sec. Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

First Clo. It must be se offendendo; it cannot be else. For here lies the point: if I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act, and an act hath three branches: it is, to act, to do, and to perform; argal, she drowned herself wittingly.

particular to bring out Hamlet's character by contrasting it with such extreme opposites.

HALLIWELL: Until within a very recent period it was customary for one of the Grave-diggers to preface his labors by divesting himself of about a dozen waistcoats, an operation which always created great merriment, and which, perhaps, had come down by tradition from the players of Shakespeare's own time. The Doctor, in The Duchess of Malfi, according to a stage-direction in ed. 1708, 'puts off his four cloaks, one after another,'—a similar stratagem to create the laughter of the audience.

4. straight] JOHNSON: Make her grave from east to west, in a direct line, parallel to the church; not from north to south, athwart the regular line. JENNENS first pointed out that 'straight' here means simply forthwith; and STEEVENS corroborated it by citations from III, iv, 1; OTH. III, iii, 87; Merry Wives, IV, ii, 81. MALONE added from Herbert's Jacula Prudentium: 'There is no churchyard so handsome that a man would desire straight to be buried there.' DOUCE (ii, 261) believes that the Clown refers to the place where the grave should be; suicides were buried on the north side of the church, in unconsecrated ground.

4. crowner] RUSHTON (Sh. Illustrated by Old Authors, p. 72): This word is generally supposed to be a corruption of the Clown's, but it is merely the English of the Law Latin coronator, from corona, a crown, which Holinshed also uses.

9. se offendendo] CALDECOOT: Used for se defendendo, a finding of the jury in justifiable homicide.

11. three branches] WARBURTON: Ridicule on scholastic divisions without distinction and of distinctions without difference. ELZE calls attention to the frequency in The Hystorie of Hamlet of these threefold 'branches of the same idea, e.g.: 'rob, pill, and spoyle;' 'A valiant, hardy, and courageous prince;' 'gestures, countenances, and words;' 'time, means, and occasions,' &c. TSCHISCWITZ says that this threefold tautological form belongs to the most ancient Germanic legal usage, and cites Grimm as an authority that it is also true of the Old

Here lies the water; good; here stands the man; good; if the man go to this water and drown himself, it is, will he nil he, he goes; mark you that; but if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself; argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life.

Sec. Clo. But is this law?

French. A parallel to the present passage is to be found in Grimm: 'egeris, feceris, gessisse.'

13. deliver] Walker (Crit. iii, 270): Hence it would appear that the Second Clown is not a gravedigger.

21. Crownier's Quest law] Sir John Hawkins: I strongly suspect that this is in ridicule of a case of forfeiture of a lease to the Crown, reported by Plowden in his 3 Eliza. It seems that Sir James Hales drowned himself in a river in a fit of insanity (produced, it is supposed, by his having been one of the judges who condemned Lady Jane Grey), and the question was whether this did not work a forfeiture to the Crown of his lease. The coroner sat on him, and a verdict of felo de se was rendered. The legal and logical subtleties arising in the course of the case gave a very fair opportunity of sneering at 'Crowner's Quest law':—Walsh said that the act consists of three parts. The first is the imagination, which is a reflection on the mind, whether or no it is convenient for him to destroy himself and what way it can be done. The second is the resolution, which is a determination of the mind to destroy himself, and to do it in this or that particular way. The third is the perfection, which is the execution of what the mind has resolved to. And this perfection consists of two parts, viz. the beginning and the end. The ginning is the doing of the act which causes death, and the end is the death, with only a sequel to the act. Much subtlety was expended in finding out whether James was the agent or the patient: or, in other words, whether he went to the or the water came to him:—Sir James Hales was dead, and how came he death? It may be answered, by drowning; and who drowned him? Sir Hales; and when did he drown him? In his life time. So that Sir Jame mined before he was born, and Plowden's Commentaries were not translated until towards the end of the eighteenth century.

25. thou say'st] CALDWELL: That is, speake'st something to the purpose. WALKER (Crit. iii, 270): Surely,—'thou say'st true.' DYER (ed. 2): The expression is elliptical. [May not the full phrase have been 'thou say'st it,' as we find it in Luke xxiii, 3; the mere dental sound, into which, in rapid pronunciation, it degenerates being absorbed by the t of say'st? Ed.]

27. even-Christen] THIRLBY (Nichols's Illust. ii, 229) was the first to point out that this is equivalent to fellow-Christian, and a remnant of the Anglo-norman emne christen, citing Spelman's Gloss., where Spelman erroneously distinguishes between emne and even. STEEVENS cites Chaucer: 'Despitous, is he that hath desdayn of his neighbour, that is to say, of his evenchristen.'—The Persones Tale, iii, 394, ed. Morris. NARES cites Sir Thos. More's Works, fol. p. 83: 'Proudly judging the lives of their even-christen; and 'thei maie not fighte against the Turke, [but] arise in grete plumpes to fighte against their even Christen.'—B. p. 277. CLARENDON: In Anglo-norman we find the compound efen-bisep, a co-bishop, efen-ese, a fellow-servant. In Forshall and Madden's Glossary to the Wycliffite Versions of the Bible, we find 'euen-caytif,' a fellow-prisoner, 'euen-seruaunt,' fellow-servant, and others. [Other instances are given in CALDWELL ad loc., in HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 261), and in The Myrour of our Ladye (F. E. Text Soc. p. 73): 'we ar enforme to hau... loue echto other, and to all oure euen criesntes.'] In a note on this passage BLUNT cites: 'Therfore Thomas that is seid Didymus, seide to euen disciplis.—Wycliffite N. I say a gentleman both of vertue and ligne, with whose sacrifice God was much pleased. His brother Cain was nengtine, for he offered God the worst of his fruitez.' — Accedences of Armorice, 1591. There is still a concealed piece of wit in the Clown's allusion to the spade. Adam's spade is set down in some of the books of heraldry as the most ancient form of escutcheons; nor is it improbable that the lower part of this utensil suggested the well-known form of the old triangular shields.

36. confess thyself] MALONE: And be hanged, the Clown would have said if he had not been interrupted. This was a common proverbial sentence. See Ov4. TV, i, 39. SNEYMOU (ii, 158) thinks that it may perhaps mean that he is to go to the priest and make confession of heathenish ignorance.

58. Vaughan] COLLIER (ed. 1): It is just possible that this was a misspelt stage-direction to inform the player that he was to play at this point. COLLIER (ed. 2): The emendation of the (MS), which we accept, is as much as to say, 'get thee to thy alehouse; fetch me a jug of liquor.' We must suppose the alehouse understood, and pointed to by the First Clo. WHITE: I suspect that this is a misprint for Tavern. But some local allusion understood at the day may lurk under it. J. SAN (N. & Q., 5 Oct. 1861): This is merely Shakespeare's English way of representing the Danish Johan.—John. NICHOLSON (N. & Q., 29 July, 1871): Most probably Vaughan was the well-known keeper of a tavern near the theatre; and we have three items of corroborative evidence which show: First, that a little before the time of this allusion by Sh., which is not found in the Qq, there was about town 'a Jew, one Yohan,' most probably a German Jew, who was a perruquier,—he is mentioned by Jonson in Every Man out of his Humour, V, vi; Second, in The Alchemist, 1, i, which was produced eleven years afterwards, Subtle speaks of 'an alehouse, darker than deaf John,' a name which sounds like that of our foreign John, anglicised, and its owner grown deaf by lapse of time; Third, that there was actually an alehouse attached to the Globe Theatre is proved by the 'Sonnett upon the Burneing' of that playhouse (see Collier's Annals of the Stage, i, 388). It is then unlikely that
In youth, when I did love, did love,
Methought it was very sweet,

Oh, methought, there was nothing meet.

our wandering Jew, either in search of a business, or as a profitable extension of his theatrical connection, set up 'the Globe Public-house;' and was thus, as the known refresher of the thirsty actors and audience, mentioned by both Sh. and Jonson? CLARENDON: It is impossible to detect the meaning which lies under this corruption.

ELZE (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, xi, 297), who accepts without qualification San's and Nicholson's suggestion, asks whether there be not an allusion to the same Johan in the sneering 'Johannes factotum' that Greene applies to Sh. C. ELLIOT BROWNE (Athenaeum, 29 July, 1876): Vaughan is a common Welsh name, and it is surely only necessary to suppose that it was borne by some Welsh tavern-keeper near the theatre.

58. stoup] CLARENDON: This word, meaning a 'drinking-cup,' is still used in college halls. It was applied to vessels of various sizes, and occurs elsewhere in Sh.

59-62, &c. THEOBALD was the first to discover that the Clown here sings some stanzas from a poem, which, because it was printed in a collection of Songs and Sonnetts, written by the right honorable Lordes Henry Howard, late Earle of Surrey, and other, and published by Tottel in 1557, Theobald inferred was written by the noble lord whose name by precedence of rank stood on the title-page. But Gascoigne, who was ten years old when Surrey was beheaded, attributes the poem in question to Lord Vaux, in an Epistle to a Young Gentleman, prefixed to his Poiesis: 'The L. Vaux his dittie, beginning thus 'I loathe, was thought by some to be made upon his death-bed,' &c. And Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii, 45, considers that 'undoubted evidence' is found that Thomas Lord Vaux was the author, in a manuscript in the British Museum (Harleian MS, 1703) in which we have a copy of this poem, beginning I loathe that I did love, with this title: 'A dyttye or sonet made by the lord Vaux ['vaux,' ap. Arber, p. xiii], in the time of the noble quene Marye, representing the Image of Death.' It is thus given in Arber's Reprint of Tottel's Miscellany, p. 173:

The aged lover renouncest love.
I loathe that I did lose,
In youth that I thought sweete:
As time requires for my behove
Me thinkes they are not mete,
My lustes they do me move,
My fantasies all be stede:
And tract of time begins to waste,
Gray neere upon my stede.
HAMLET

[59-62. 'In youth, when I did love.']
For age with steyling steppes,
Hath clawed me with his cowche [crowch],
And lusty life away she leapes,
As there had bene none such,
My muse dothe not delight
Me as she did before:
My hand and pen are not in plight,
As they haue bene of yore.
For reason me denies,
This youthly, idle rime:
And day by day to me she cries,
Leaue of these toyses in time.
The wrinkles in my brow,
The farrowes in my face:
Say limpyng age will hewde him now
Where youth must grue him place.
The harbinger of death,
To me I see him ride:
The cough, the colde, the gaspyng breath,
Doth bid me to prouide,
A pikeax and a spade
And eke a shrowdyng shete,
A house of claye for to be made,
For such a gost most mete.
Me thinkes I heare the clarke,
That knolls the careful knoll:
And bids me lese my wofull warke,
By nature me compelle.
My kepere knyt the knot,
That youth did laughe to scorne:
Of me that clene shalte forget,
As I had not ben borne.
Thus must I youth gene vp,
Whose badge I long did weare:
To them I yeyle the wanton cup
That may it better beare.
Loe here the bared scull,
By whose bald signe I know:
That stopyng age away shall pull,
Which youthfull yeres did sowe.
For beauty with her bande
These crooked cares hath wrought:
And shipped me into the lande,
From whence I first was brought.
And ye that bide behinde,
Hause ye none other trust:
As ye of claye were cast by kinde,
So shall ye waste to dust.

PERCY in his Reliques suggests that the different corruptions in these stanzas as sung by the Grave-digger [notably line 61] may have been designed by Sh. 'the better to paint the character of an illiterate clown.' Of course there have not been wanting critics who would fain 'offer these lines cu'd and perfect of their limbs, but the task is hopeless, and we must be consoled, as ELZE says, by the reflection that the common people in all times and in all climes have sung nonsense. The 'oh' and the 'ah,' as JENNENS notes, form no part of the song, but are 'only the breath forced out by the strokes of the mattock.' M. MASON suggests that instead of 'for, ah,' we read for yea, because the Clown means that, though he was in love, it was not meet to contract himself for ever. CLARENDON thinks that 'for-a,' there-a, nothing-a (see Text. Notes), represent the drawling notes in which the Clown sings, like 'stilt-a' and 'mile-a,' in Wint. Tale, IV, ii, 123. The first two lines of each of the stanzas sung by the Clown are used by Goethe in the Second Part of Faust, for a part of the song chanted by the Lemures while digging Faust's grave. It is noteworthy that Goethe adopted the 'crutch' of the original instead of 'clutch.' See the note on that passage in Bayard Taylor's most admirable translation of Faust, vol. ii, p. 528. CHAPPELL (i, 216): On the margin of a copy of the Earl of Surrey's poems, some of the little airs to which his favorite songs were sung are written in characters of the times. From this copy the following tune for 'I lothe that I did love' is taken. On the stage the Grave-digger in Hamlet now sings them to the tune of The Children in the Wood. [See line 89 of this scene.]

Slow.

I loathe that I did love, In youth that I thought sweet: As time requires for my behoove Me-thinks they are not meet.

CLARENDON: 'Property' here means individual peculiarity, and 'of easiness' is used with adjectival force, as in I, ii, 4.

CLARENDON: Compare Tro. & Cret. I, i, 59.

BUCKHILL (p. 119): This line is but half truth. Does custom blunt the fingers of a watchmaker, the eyes of a printer, or the auditory nerve of a musician? Did the grave-digger do his own sombre work with less skill because he had been accustomed to it for thirty years? Custom blunts our sensations to those impressions which we do not attend to, and it sharpens them to those which we do. Custom in Ham. himself had sharpened the speculative faculties which he exercised, while it

An author in revising his work, when his original ideas have faded from his mind, and new observations have produced new sentiments, easily introduces images which have been more newly impressed upon him, without observing their want of congruity to the general texture of his original design. such scenes and such characters with deliberate intention, and with a view to artistic relief and contrast, there can hardly be a doubt. We must take it for granted that a man whose works show everywhere the results of judgement sometimes acted with forethought. I find the springs of the profoundest sorrow and pity in this hardened indifference of the Grave-diggers, in their careless discussion as to whether Ophelia's death was by suicide or no, in their singing and jesting at their dreary work. We know who is to be the guest of this earthen hospitality,—how much beauty, love, and heart-break are to be covered in that pit of clay. All we remember of Oph. reacts upon us with tenfold force, and we recoil from our amusement at the ghastly drollery of the two delivers with a shock of horror. That the unconscious Ham. should stumble on this grave of all others, that it should be here that he should pause to muse humorously on death and decay,—all this prepares us for the revulsion of passion in the next scene, and for the frantic confession: 'I loved Ophelia; Forty thousand brothers Could not with all their quantity of love Make up my sum!' And it is only here that such an asseveration would be true even to the feeling of the moment; for it is plain from all we know of Ham. that he could not so have loved Oph., that he was incapable of the self-abandonment of a true passion, that he would have analyzed this emotion as he does all others, would have peeped and botanized upon it till it became to him a mere matter of scientific interest. All this force of contrast, and this horror of surprise, were necessary so to intensify his remorseful regret that he should believe himself for once in earnest. The speech of the King, 'Oh, he is mad, Laertes,' recalls him to himself, and he at once begins to rave.

94. lawyer] C. Elliot Browne (Athenæum, 22 May, 1875): There is a striking imitation of this passage in Raynoldes's Dolarmy's Primerace, 1606 [which, despite the eulogy of Sh. contained in it, Caldecott pronounces 'a very mean performance.' Ed.]:

'Why might not this have been some lawyer's paste,
    The which sometimes brib'd, brib'd, and took a fee
And lawe exacted to the highest rate;
    Why might not this be such a one as he?
Your quirks and quilletts, now Sir, where be they?
Now he is mute and not a word can say,' &c.

94. quiddits] NARES: A contraction of quiddity, which is from [Mid. Lat.] miditas, not from quidlibet. It was used, as quiddity also was, for a subtlety, or nice refinement. Generally applied to the subtleties of lawyers. WEDGWOOD: Mid. Lat. quiditas, the whiteness or distinctive nature of a thing, brought into a by-word by the nice distinction of the schools.

94. quilletts] MALONE: Nice and frivolous distinctions. The word is rendered by Cole, Lat. Dict.: res frivola. NADES follows Bailey in deriving it from quidlibet, a diminutive of quibble. DOUCE (i, 231) derives it from quidlibet. But NADES objects to this, that the scholastic phrase was uniformly quidlibet, never quidlibet. WEDGWOOD: Notwithstanding NADES's objection that the scholastic phrase was quod libet, and not quidlibet, the derivation from this source was probably correct. F. J. V. [N. & Q., 18 Sept. 1875]: As 'quiddit' is from the logical term quiditas, why may not 'quillet' or 'quilit' be from another logical term, qualitas? The word may have been originally quallit, then the a may have been thinned into i to make it jingle with 'quiddit.'

94-103. LORD CAMPBELL (p. 110): These terms of art are all used seemingly with a full knowledge of their import; and it would puzzle some practising barristers with whom I am acquainted to go over the whole seriatim, and to define each of them satisfactorily.

96. sconce] CLARENDON: A colloquial and jocose term, like costard, pate, mazard, &c.

99, 100. statutes, recognizances, fines, double vouchers, recoveries] RITSON: A recovery with double voucher is the one usually suffered, and is so denominated from two persons (the latter of whom is always the common crier, or some such inferior person) being successively vouched, or called upon, to warrant the tenant's title. Both 'fines' and 'recoveries' are fictons of law, used to convert an estate tail into a fee simple. 'Statutes' are (not acts of parliament, but) statutemerchant and staple, particular modes of recognizance or acknowledgement for securing debts, which thereby become a charge upon the party's land. 'Statutes' and 'recognizances' are constantly mentioned together in the covenants of a purchase deed.

100. fine of his fines] CALDECOTT: This is the end of, or utmost attained by, the operation of all this legal machinery. RUSHTON (Sh. a Lawyer, p. 10): The first 'fine' means not a penalty, but an end. CLARENDON: Compare All's Well, IV, iv, 35.

101. fine dirt] WALKER (Crit. i, 316): Foule? DYCE (ed. 2): I believe the old text is right here. RUSHTON (Sh. a Lawyer, p. 10) acutely interprets this 'fine,' like the preceding 'fine,' in the sense of last. 'His fine pate is filled, not with fine dirt, but with the last dirt which will ever occupy it, leaving a satirical inference to be drawn, that even in his lifetime his head was filled with dirt.'

Malone understood it as only another name for chart, and paraphrased its use in the present instance by: 'we must speak with the same precision and accuracy as is observed in marking the true distances of coasts, the heights, courses, &c., in a sea-chart.' Dyce selected this as the definition of the present passage in his Glossary. Staunton says it is 'rather an allusion to the card and calendar of etiquette, or book of manners, of which more than one were published during Shakespeare's age.' Ritson notes its use by Osric, V, ii, 109. Whosoever its immediate derivation, 'to speak by the card' undoubtedly means to speak with precision.

Steevens: This fashion was carried to such excess that it was restrained by proclamation in the fifth year of Edward IV, when it was ordered, 'that the beaks or pykes of shoes and boots should not pass two inches upon pain of cursing by the clergy, and forfeiting twenty shillings. . . . Before this time, and since 1482, the pykes of shoes and boots were of such length that they were fain to be tied up to the knee with chains of silver, and gilt, or at least silken, laces.' Malone: That is, so spruce, so quaint, so affected. There is no allusion to picked or pointed shoes. [Douce agrees with Malone here, because this fashion had expired

139. the . . . born] BLACKSTONE: By this scene it appears that Ham. was then thirty years old, and knew Yorick well, who had been dead twenty-three years. And yet in the beginning of the play he is spoken of as a very young man, one that designed to go back to school, i.e. to the University of Wittenberg. The poet in the Fifth Act had forgot what he wrote in the First. TCHISCHWITZ: Blackstone's criticism is founded on a very erroneous idea of German Universities and their arrangements. It is well known that A. v. Humboldt, up to an advanced age, attended lectures (Collegia hodie) under his friend Boehkh.

153. [The words of the Grave-digger are so explicit that the age of Ham. has been generally accepted as that of thirty years, and none the less generally has it been felt that this age does not accord, as Blackstone says, with the impression of his youth which Ham. in the earlier scenes gives us. HALLIWELL [see Text Notes] attempts to avoid the difficulty by the aid of Q₂, but this aid will hardly bear analysis. In line 1922 of Q, the Clown says 'heres a scull hath bin here this dozen yeare;' the conversion for sixteen lines then turns upon Ham., and his being sent to England. At the end of it Ham. says, 'whose scull was this?' It is by no means certain that the former skull is here referred to; the Clown may have just turned up another. It does not follow, therefore, of necessity that it was Yorick's skull that had lain in the ground a dozen years, and Q. fails us here at the most important point. GRANT WHITE, at the beginning of his story of Hamlet the Younger, says that the Prince was twenty years old when the tragedy opens, and at the close his essay, probably overlooking this statement, says that Ham. was thirty years of age in the Fifth Act. No one would impute to so shrewd a scholar as GRANT WHITE the supposition that the action of the tragedy lasted ten years. EDUARD and OTTO DEVRIENDT, in their ed. of Sh., contend, and with much force, for Hamlet's extreme youth [see Appendix, Vol. II], and modify their text accordingly. FURNIVALL (New Sh. Soc. Trans., Part ii, 1874, p. 494), speaking of the 'startling inconsistencies' in regard to Hamlet's age, says: 'We know how early, in olden time, young men of rank were put to arms; how early, if they went to a University, they left it for training in Camp and Court. Ham., at a University, could hardly have pass'd 20; and with this age the plain mention of youth [in I, iii, 7; I, iii, 11-12; and I, iii, 123-4] agrees. With this, too, agrees the King's reproach to Ham. for his intent in going back to Wittenberg; and Hamlet's own revolt-of-nature at his mother's quick marriage to his uncle. Had he been much past 21, and had he had more experience of then women, he'd have taken his mother's changeableness more coolly. I look on it as certain, that when Sh. began the play he conceived Ham. as quite a young man. But as the play grew, as greater weight of reflection, of insight into character, of knowledge of life, &c., were wanted, Sh. necessarily and naturally made Ham. a formed man; and, by the time that he got to the Grave-diggers' scene, told us the Prince was 30,—the right age for him then; but not his age when Laer. and Pol. warnd Oph. against his blood that burn'd, his youthful fancy for her,—"a toy in blood"—

&c. The two parts of the play are inconsistent on this main point in Hamlets state.
[153. Hamlet’s age.]

What matter? Who wants ‘em made consistent by the modification of either part? The “thirty” is not in Q; yet who wants to go back to that?” Minto (The Examiner, 6 Mar. 1875) contends that apart from the Grave-digger’s speech and the thirty years of the wedded life of the Player King and the Player Queen (and he is at a loss to understand how these passages came into the play), “the natural construction is that Ham. and his associates were youths of seventeen, fresh from the University. That was the usual age in Shakespeare’s time at which young nobles set out on their travels, and there is no reason to suppose that he thought of altering the University age in his play, and no hint that Ham. was so very much older than his companions.”

..., “A proper conception of Hamlet’s age is essential to the understanding of the play. He is a youth called home from the University by his father’s death; a youth of the age of Romeo, or of young Prince Hal at the time of his father’s accession.”

..., “Hamlet’s action is not the weak and petulant action of an emasculated man of thirty, but the daring, wilful, defiant action of a high-spirited sensitive youth, rudely summoned from the gay pursuits of youth, and confronted suddenly with monstrous treachery, with crime that blurs the modesty and grace of nature, that makes the very sunlight fire, and loads the sweet air of heaven with pestilence.” Marshall (p. 181) thinks that Sh. intended Ham. to be nearer twenty than thirty; the general features of his character are those of youth, and the frequent allusions throughout the play to his being very young forbids the belief that he was really thirty years old. The Grave-digger may mean that he began to serve his apprenticeship thirty years before; but he may not have come to the trade of grave-maker till some years later; so that it does not necessarily follow that the day when King Hamlet overcame Fortinbras was thirty years previously. ..., “The most material objection against Hamlet’s being more than between twenty and twenty-three years of age is that if he were older his mother could scarcely have been the object of such a passion as that of Claudius.”

Minto afterwards (in The Academy, 18 December, 1875) expressed his views at greater length. Against the weighty authority of the Grave-digger is to be placed Laer., whose advice to Oph. in simple prose means that she was not to trust Ham., because he was at an age of changeful fancies and fleeting attachments. Who would speak of the love of a man of thirty as “a violet in the youth of primy nature”? The very idea is a profanation of words, which carry such fragrance with them when applied to the first love of budding youth. Again, the University age of young noblemen at that time was from seventeen to nineteen, and Laer. had just left the University; Ham. wanted to go back to it, and Hor. is under suspicion of playing “truant.” The play is full of allusions to the youth of the personages coeval with Ham. Fort. is “Young Fortinbras,” Laer. is “Young Laertes,”—the epithet in both cases being repeated. The King speaks of skill with the rapier as a “very riband in the cap of youth.” Hamlet’s envy of Laertes’s fame with the rapier has an almost boyish air. Making Ham. thirty also adds some improbability to the succession of Claudius to his murdered brother; if at that age Ham. had tamely submitted to such a usurpation, and desired to go back to school in Wittenberg, he would have been too contemptible a character to be fitted for any dramatist’s hero. Prof. Dowden having pronounced, in a notice of Werder’s Hamlet (The Academy, 4 Dec. 1875), that theory incredible which “makes Ham., the utterer of the saddest [153. Hamlet's age.]

and most thoughtful soliloquies to be found in Sh., a boy of seventeen,' Minst replies that we are apt to underrate the precocity of boys of seventeen. 'I venture to say that sad and thoughtful questionings of the mysteries of life are more common among boys under twenty than among men of thirty.' 'Not only is it possible for sad thoughts to come to a youth of seventeen, but it is at such an age, when the character is not deeply founded, that the shattering of first ideals is most overwhelming. The terrible circumstances that overthrew Hamlet's noble mind gave a stimulus to the development of his thoughtfulness apart from an increase of years. The fresher and brighter our conception of the gay boy-world out of which he was summoned, the deeper becomes the monstrous tint of the horrible ambition, murder, and incest, which appalled his vision and paralyzed the clear working of his mind when he was first called upon to play a man's part in the battle of life. Too much has been said of the philosophic temperament of Ham.; impulse and passion were more in his nature than philosophy; his philosophy was not a serene growth, a natural development of a mind predisposed to thought; it was wrung out of him by circumstances terrible enough to make the most obtuse mind pause and reflect.' Prof. Dowden (The Academy, 25 Dec. 1875) urged the following considerations in condemnation of the theory that Ham. was a youth of seventeen: 'The poet's youngest heroines (children of the South) are aged fourteen (Juliet, Marina) and fifteen (Miranda).
The age of Perdita is sixteen. Sh. loved these earliest years of budding womanhood. What is the corresponding period of early manhood that charms the poet's imagination? At what age does Sh. conceive that boyhood is blooming into adult strength and beauty? I answer, from twenty-one to twenty-five. The stolen sons of Cymbeline, boys just ready to be men, are aged twenty-three and twenty-two;
Florizel looks about twenty-one (Wint. Tale, V, i, 126); Troilus, a beardless youth (two or three hairs upon his chin), is older: 'he ne'er saw three-and-twenty.' I am not aware that we can determine Romeo's age. Prince Hal at the time of his father's accession was some twelve years old, but Sh. represents him as considerably older. When the battle of Shrewsbury took place (Henry being in fact sixteen years old), Sh., I believe, intends his age to be 'twenty-two or thereabouts' (1 Hen.
IV : III, iii, 212). When Henry V ascended the throne, his age was twenty-six, and there is no reason to suppose that Sh., who had up to that point made him older than the Prince Henry of history, now represented him as younger. The Bishop of Ely says: 'My thrice puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth.' Test the theory of Hamlet's extreme youth by the other plays. Are we to imagine the utterer of the soliloquy, 'To be or not to be,' as five or six years the junior of the boys of old Belarius, and that at a period of life when each added year counts for much? Is Florizel,—one of Shakespeare's ideals of youthful grace,—four years older than Ham.? Did Ham. begin his observations on society (V, i, 150) at fourteen? Were his schoolfellows,—dispatched on a critical mission to England,—also youths of seventeen? Can it be proved that any chief male personage in Shakepeare's plays is aged seventeen, or eighteen, or even nineteen? The dating of the Player-King's marriage is important in this discussion. His thirty years' wife (representing Gertrude) is not too old to win a second husband's love; therefore Gertrude, although the 'hey-day of her blood' is 'tame,' is not necessarily too old; we may imagine her forty-seven. But I am not greatly concerned to maintain the Player-King's and the Grave-digger's dates, except for the sake of resisting rash tampering with Shakespeare's text. I can imagine Ham. as a man in the 'May-morn of his youth' at twenty-six or twenty-five. I am much concerned, however, to oppose such a misreading of the play as would not only render the conception of Ham. incoherent, but would pervert our view of an entire group of lovely characters,—the Florizels and Polydores and Ferdinands of Sh. And I would note that Sh. found it possible to think of thirty as a youthful age. The Grave-digger himself speaks of 'young Hamlet.' In Much Ado we read (of fashions in clothes): 'How giddily a' turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty.' In the Sonnets Sh. names forty (not thirty) as the age when has married the face. In the Elegy on Burbadge, that great actor is praised for his equal success in the part of 'young Hamlet' and of 'old Hieronymo.' If Burbadge represented Ham. as thirty years of age, still, in spite of the thirty years, Burbadge's Ham. passed for young. I will, however, yield something, and if any critic will efficiently knock upon the mazzard that 'absolute' knave, the Clown, I accept as satisfactory the age assigned by Marshall,—twenty-five.

In The Academy, 11 March, 1876, J. W. Hales cites the following quotation from a well-known book as noteworthy with regard to Hamlet's age: 'For fashion sake some [Danes] will put their children to schoole, but they set them not to it till they are fourteen years old; so that you shall see a great boy with a beard learner his A B C, and sit weeping under the rod when he is thirty years old.'—Nash's Pierce Penniless's Supplication to the Devil, ed. Collier, for the Sh. Soc. p. 27. 'So, after all,' adds Hales, 'there is perhaps less inconsistency in the play than has been supposed. I do not mean that there is none.'

What he abhors, what his gorge rises at, is his imagination that here hung the lips that he has kissed. This construction is sustained by the reading of Q, 'those lippes...they abhorre me.' CLARKE: 'It' in this sentence, and in 'my gorge rises at it', is used in reference to the idea of having been borne on the back of him whose skeleton remains are thus suddenly presented to the speaker's gaze, the idea of having caressed and been fondled by one whose mouldering fleshless skull is now held in the speaker's hand.

body of a person who comes to an untimely end to receive Christian burial? CLAR-

ENDON: This suggestion of Whalley's receives support from the conversation of the Clowns at the beginning of the scene, but is scarcely consistent with what follows in the next line, where 'great command' evidently refers to the influence of the king, which had been exercised so as to interfere with the usual proceedings. The rubric before the Burial Office forbids it to be used for persons who have laid violent hands upon themselves. For the word 'warrantise,' see Cotgrave: 'Garentage: m. War-

220. crants] Crants Qq. Rites Fl.

220. crants] Warburton pronounced this an 'evident corruption of chantis; the true word,' on the ground that a specific rather than a generic term was required to answer to 'maiden strewments.' Edwards, whose book, Canons of Criticism, was written in ridicule of Warburton's edition, suggests deservingly (7th ed., p. 147) that Warburton had better have 'pitched upon grants, wants, pants, or any other, provided it rhymes to chantis; because it would seem by the very next speech of the Priest that these same chantis were the only things denied her ['To sing a requiem']. If Warburton's reading be approved, we should, to restore integrity, make a slight alteration in line 221, and read 'Her maiden' instruments' for instruments. Music, not only vocal, but instrumental also. Heath supposes 'crants' to be a misprint for grants, that is, 'the ceremonies granted by custom to those who died unmarried,' and that Sh. afterwards substituted rites. Johnson, on the authority of an anonymous correspondent, was the first to explain 'crants' as the German word for garlands; adding, that 'to carry garlands before the bier of a maiden, and to hang them over her grave, is still the practice in rural parishes.' 'Crants,' therefore, was the original word, which Sh., discovering to be provincial, and perhaps not understood, changed to a term more intelligible, but less proper. 'Maiden rites' give no certain or definite image. Malone doubted whether this and many other changes in the Folio were made by Sh., as an attentive comparison of the Qq and Fl would show. Dyce (ed. 1) emphasises the fact on which both Warburton and Dr Johnson lay stress, viz.: that a specific, definitive image is here essential, and that rites does not fulfil this requirement, while 'crants' does. Of the advocates for rites, Knight and White are the chief; the former urges that the 'maiden strewments' are the flowers, the garlands, which piety scatters over the bier of the young and innocent. The rites included these. White agrees with him, that 'crants' would hereby be a mere repetition. Else cannot avoid the conviction that 'crants' is a sophistication, since a most unusual and foreign word would never be applied to a most usual and domestic ceremony. In Dyce's second ed. he gives this note of Lettsom's: 'Most of the edd. explain 'crants' by garlands; but the German Krans is singular, and the singular seems indispensable here. From a note to Prior's Danish Ballads, it would seem that young unmarried Danish ladies wear, or wore, chaplets of pearl; at least, 'fair Elsey' is described as wearing one; and the translator (vol. iii, p. 111) says that this is the same as the 'virgin crant (sic) of Oph.' Guided by this, Dyce, in his Gloss., defines 'crants,' a crown, a chaplet, a garland, and cites Jamieson, Etym. Dict. of the Scottish Lang.: Crance... Test. Krans, corona, corolla, sertum, strophium, Kilian. Germ. Krans, &c. It is perhaps worth noting that Jamieson, in this same passage cited by Dyce, gives an instance of the plural: 'Their helds wer garnisht gallandrie With costly crancis maid of gold.'—Watson's Collection of Choice Songs, &c., ii, 10. Halliwell gives a wood-cut of a funeral garland seen by Fairholt in 1844, suspended in St Albans Abbey. 'It was then,' says

Fairholt, 'very old, and I was told by the sexton that such garlands were once commonly borne before the bodies of unmarried women to the grave, and suspended in the church afterwards, but that the custom had ceased twenty years before this time. The substructure was formed of wooden hoops, to which were affixed rosettes of coloured paper, and flowers, real and artificial, covered the whole; when I saw it nothing but the remains of the artificial decorations remained; but the sexton explained to me that the whole had been originally thickly covered with flowers. According to Nares no other instance of the use of this word had been found; it was reserved for Elze to discover two examples of it elsewhere. In Chapman's _Alphonsus_ (ed. Elze, 1867, p. 82) there is the following stage-direction: 'Enter . . . . Saxon, Mertz like Clowns with each of them a Mitre with Corances on their heads.' In a note on 'corances,' Elze says, referring to the present passage in _Hamlet_: 'Sh., in my opinion, made the acquaintance of this German importation at the Steelyard, or he witnessed the funeral, in London, of some young German girl, where the coffin was decked, according to the German custom, with "crances"; nay, both may have been the case. From the present passage it would appear that we ought to write corroborate. See Cooper's _List of Foreign Protestants and Aliens_, where "Hans" is usually spelt "Hance" or "Haunce."' The second instance occurs on p. 117, 'When thou hast stolen her dainty rose-corance.'

He uses phrases so homely that there is something very like scorn in them: “What wilt thou do for her?” is the quietude of contempt for Laer.’s insulting rant; and so, if my memory deceive me not, the elder Kean gave it. “Do for her” being contrasted with Laer’s braggadocio “say.” Then come the possibilities: weep, fight, fast, tear thyself (all, be it noted, common lovers’ tricks), drink up eisel, eat a crocodile. Here the crocodile probably refers to those put up in spirits in apothecaries’ shops. Here we have possibilities put against the rant of Laer.; the doing against the saying; things that could be done, for Ham. ends with “I’ll do it.” But his quick imagination has caught an impetus from its own motion, and he goes on; “Nay, I’ll even out-prate you,” and then follows his superior rant, not uttered with vehemence, but with quiet philosophic scorn."

263. woo’t fast] Singer: Woo't, or wool’s, in the northern counties, is the common contraction of wouldst thou. Walker (Crit. iii, 271): Can any good reason be given why we should write woo’t or won’t here and not elsewhere? Lettsom (Footnote to Walker): Halliwell, in his Dict., has 'Woot'. Will thee. West.' In the passage before us the context requires wile, and this, indeed, is the text of Qr, Clarendon: A colloquialism by which Ham. marks his contempt for Laer. In Ant. & Cleo. IV, ii, 7; IV, xv, 59, it indicates affectionate familiarity.

264. eisel] With the exception of ' the dram of eale, ' no word or phrase in this tragedy has occasioned more discussion than this Exile or Exile, which, as it stands, represents nothing in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth, if from the last we exclude the vessels of Qr. Rowe and Pope blindly followed the blind compositors of the Qqff. Theobald saw the difficulty so clearly that subsequent criticism has chiefly ranged itself on one or other of the two interpretations suggested by him, viz. the word either represents the name of a river, or is an old eold, meaning vinegar. Theobald’s objection to its being the name of a river is that it must be some river in Denmark, and that he knew of none there so called, nor any other, idem sonam, nearer than ' the Yssel, from which the Province of Over-yssel derives its title in German Flanders.' This objection comes strangely from Theobald, for none knew better than he that Sh., who did not hesitate to make Ham. swear by St Patrick, would have been just as likely to mention a river in farthest Ind as in Denmark, if the name flashed into his mind, and would have been intelligible to his audience. 'Besides,' continues Theobald, ' Ham. is not proposing impossibilities to Laer., as the drinking up a river would be, but he rather seems to mean, Wilt thou resolve to do things the most shocking and distasteful? and, behold, I am as resolute.' Hammond, forgetful of his own good rule of not giving a loose to fancy, ' changed ' Exile' into Nile, without a note or comment, in his first edition, to indicate that it was not Shakespeare’s word; and then, to fill up the measure of the verse, introduced another woo’t before ' eat.' Capell (Notes, &c., i, 145) says it is palpable that a river is intended, but there is no absolute necessity, because a crocodile is mentioned, that the river must be the Nile, and Hamner’s better reading would have been Nile, which would have suited the metre without the addition of woo’t. (See post Else.) Capell then goes on to say that 'Sh. sought a river in Denmark, and, finding none that would both, coin’d the word—Exile; in a supposition that there might be a brook so denominated, which Elsinore stood upon, and took it's name from.' Capell therefore printed Eisel in his text, in Italics. Steevens says that Ham. certainly meant (for he says he will rant) to dare Laer, to attempt anything, however difficult or unnatural, such as draining the channel of a river, or trying his teeth on an animal whose scales are supposed to be impenetrable. 'Theobald's Yssel,' adds Steevens, 'would serve Hamlet's turn or mine. The river is twice mentioned by Stowe, p. 725: "It standeth a good distance from the river Isel, but hath a sconce on Isel of incredible strength." Again, by Drayton, in Polyolbion, The twenty-fourth Song, p. 359, ed. 1748: "Th' one o'er Isell's banks the ancient Saxon's taught: At Over-Issel rests," &c. But in an old Latin account of Danmark and the neighboring provinces I find the names of several rivers little differing from Eisel, or Isell, in spelling or pronunciation. Such are the Eusa, the Oesel, and some others. . . . Sh. might have written the Weisel, a considerable river which falls into the Baltic Ocean, and could not be unknown to any Prince of Denmark. Malony, in his first edition, 1790, having adopted Theobald's eisel, discarded it in the Var. 1821, and adopted Steevens's interpretation on the ground that such hyperbole was common among ancient poets. So in Eastward Hoe, 1609: 'Come drink up Rhine, Thames, and Meander dry.' Also Greene's Orlando Furioso, 1599: 'Else would I set my mouth to Tygris' streames, And drinke up overflowings Euphrates.' And in Marlowe's Jew of Malta: 'As sooner shalt thou drink the ocean dry, Than conquer Malta.' Boswell cites Tros. & Cresp. III, ii, 84, as containing a 'similar exaggeration,' but the similarity is by no means exact. More to the purpose is his reference to Chaucer's Remount of the Rose [I, 5712, ed. Morris]: 'He undiforthe a gret payne, That undir taketh to drinke up Seyne.' Nares considers the challenge to drink vinegar, in such rant, so inconsistent and even ridiculous that we must decide for the river, whether its name can be exactly found or not. Caldecott agrees with Steevens, that it refers to the Yssel, the most northern branch of the Rhine, one which flows nearest to Denmark, and by Zutphen into the Zuyder Zee. Caldecott adds strength to Steevens's supposition, that it might refer to the Vistula or Weisel, by showing, in a passage from King Alfred's Anglo-Saxon version of Orosius, that Denmark's possessions once extended as far as the Weisel-mouth; but very sensibly adds that even if Weisel were nearer to the text, both to the eye and ear, than it is, it is very little likely that Sh. was read in the early Danish geographies, or that he gave himself any concern about them; Sh. took his geography from more accessible sources, and from points nearer home. Knight adopts Caldecott's interpretation. In N. & Qu., vol. ii, p. 244, 1850, Singer started a discussion of the meaning of this phrase by asserting that 'eisel' means Wormwood Wine, a nauseously bitter medicament much in vogue in Shakespeare's time. Could he have proved this, the discovery would have been valuable, but unfortunately the premises from which he drew his conclusion were weak. In Thomas's Ital. Dict. 1562, says Singer, we have "As- sentio, Eyssel," and Florio renders Assentio by Wormwood. What is meant, however, is Absinthisrs or Wormwood wine. The inference here is that Florio refers to a liquid Wormwood, whereas he defines 'Assentio, . . . the herbs Wormwood,' which, I am afraid, weakens Singer's conclusion. In the same journal (vol. iv, p. 64, 1851) J. S. W. sums up the controversy, and decides in favor of a river, because to drink a potion of vinegar 'is utterly tame and spiritless in a place where anything but tameness is wanted, and where it is quite out of keeping with the rest of the speech.' Elze contends vigorously for Nilus, not only because 'crocodiles' are immediately mentioned, but because in Elizabethan times the Nile was the home, and the synonym, for everything wondrous and monstrous, and was moreover held to be one of the mightiest of rivers, if not the mightiest. To drink up the boundless Nile is an hyperbole than which nothing could better befit the occasion; Ham. wished to express a pure impossibility. To Delius's well-put objection that it is difficult to see how so familiar a word as Nile could be sophisticated into vessels, Esils, and Eysil, Elze opposes the supposition that the Dutch Yssel or the Danish Oesil was a marginal gloss of some wiseacre who thought it more appropriate to the unities of the drama, and which by accident crept into the text. In N. & Q., 12 Feb. 1859, Cuthbert Bede offers a citation which would bring the river much closer to the doors of the Globe theatre than any yet proposed: 'The Saxon etymon of Yeldon, according to Mr. Sharon Turner, is Yseudume, i.e. the Down of the Yssel, which I take to have been the original name of some river, most likely of the river of Wells, which flowed into the Fleet River; but I consider also that Ysel or Eysel is the same as Ousel, the diminutive of Ouse or Eyez, in the British language, signifying either a river or water.'—Yeldon; a Perambulation of Islington, by T. E. Tomkims, Esq. Halliwell thinks that the Oesil or Isell is referred to, and adds, 'obscure streams certainly, but the reading is hardly to be rejected on that account, for the name would be at least as familiar to an Elizabethan audience as that of the mountain of Ossa, mentioned in the same speech. Sh. in all probability adopted both names from the older play on Hamlet.' Dr. Scadding (Canadian Journal, No. LXI, 1866, p. 70) also advocates Nilus, and attributes to 'indistinctness of writing, perhaps, the wrong orthography of a y for an i, and an accidental transposition of syllables in the printing-office' the conversion of 'Nilus into Eysell, Eisl or Eysil (in these several ways the modern text is given), conjectured by the commentators to be variously eisil (that is, perhaps, vinegar in the sense of poison) or vessels (that is, huge caldrons) or some proper name. Keightley adopts Yssel, because its name may have been familiar to the English mind from the fact that it was at Zutphen, on its banks, that Sir Philip Sidney received his death-wound.

Thus far I have cited only those who are in favor of the name of a river, and have given all their arguments except one, which I have not repeated in every instance, because all more or less emphasize it; and this argument, which many find convincing, lies in the words 'drink up;' this, it is claimed, means to drain, to exhaust, and must apply to a river or to something concrete—it cannot apply to vinegar or to anything in the abstract; Ham. never could have challenged Laer. to drink up all the vinegar in the world,—there was a limit even to professed rant. Malone was the first to note that this phrase, 'drink up,' does not of necessity mean to exhaust totally, citing in proof Shakespeare's 114th Sonnet, where it is synonymous with merely to drink: 'Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery,' and again in the same Sonnet: 'And my great mind most kingly drinks it up;' and in Tro. & Cret. II, iii, 211, 'his silence drinks up his applause' (through an oversight Malone cites this from Timon). 'In Shakespeare's time,' adds Malone, 'to drink up often meant no more than simply to drink. So in Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598: "Serbire, to sip or sup up any drink." In like manner we sometimes say, "when you have swallowed down this potion," meaning when you have swallowed it.' He might have cited from Hamlet, I, iv, 10: 'drains his draughts of Rhenish down.' Gifford is more emphatic on this point in a note on Jonson’s Every Man in his Humour, IV, v (Works, p. 122, ed. 1816, cited by Dyce): ‘It may just be observed that off, out, and up, are continually used by the purest and most excellent of our old writers, after verbs of destroying, consuming, eating, drinking, &c., to us, who are less conversant with the power of language, they appear, indeed, somewhat like expletives; but they undoubtedly contributed something to the force, and something to the roundness, of the sentence.’ In confirmation of this use of up, Dyce cites the following passages: Love’s Lab. Lost, IV, iii, 305; All’s Well, IV, iii, 250; King John, IV, iii, 133; As You Like It, II, i, 62; Tro. & Cress. III, ii, 189. If more instances be needed, at least half a dozen can be found by reference to Schmidt’s invaluable Lexicon, s.v. 7; or to Mrs Furness’s Concordance to Shakespeare’s Poems, s.v. ‘up.’ The passages, however, cited by Malone and Dyce do not satisfy Grant White of the soundness of Gifford’s explanation; he thinks that in all of them ‘up’ conveys the sense either of totality or completeness, as in the lines from Love’s Lab. Lost, All’s Well, and Tro. & Cress. III, ii, 189 (and herein Schmidt agrees with him); or of eagerness or insatiability, as in the lines from 114th Sonnet and Tro. & Cress. II, iii, 211. The use of ‘up’ in the present passage seemed, therefore, to Grant White fatal to the interpretation of ‘eisel,’ or vinegar. But granting that the sense of ‘totality or completeness’ is inapplicable here, is not ‘eagerness or insatiability’ the very sense required? I cannot but believe, therefore, that in the present passage, ‘drink up esil,’ means no more than ‘to quaff esil,’ whatever that may be.

I now turn to the second interpretation by Theobald, who says: ‘I am persuaded the poet wrote “eisel,” that is, Wilt thou swallow down large draughts of vinegar? The proposition, indeed, is not very grand; but the doing it might be as distasteful and unsavory as eating the flesh of a crocodile. And now there is neither an impossibility nor an anticlimax; and the lowness of the idea is in some measure removed by the uncommon term.’ Thereupon he cites Chaucer, The Rymeoun of the Rose, line 217: ‘—breed Keneden with eisel strong and egre;’ Shakespeare’s 111th Sonnet: ‘Potions of eisel ’gainst my strong infection’ and Sir Thomas More’s Poems (p. 21, ed. 1557): ‘remember therewithal How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.’ Capell, in his dissent from this interpretation, indulges in a gird of most unusual humour for him: ‘if Eisel, an old word that signifies vinegar, be the right reading, it must be because “tis wanted for sauce to the crocodile.’ Steevens, too, has his merry fling at it: ‘neither is that challenge very magnificent which only provokes an adversary to hazard a fit of the heart-burn or the colic.’ Hunter (ii, 263) thinks that the ‘Potions of eysell’ in the 111th Sonnet prove that it was not any river so called, but a desperate drink. ‘The word,’ he adds, ‘occurs often in a sense of which accetum is the best representative, associated with verjuice and vinegar. It is a term used for one ingredient of the bitter potion given to our Saviour on the cross, about the composition of which the commentators are divided. Thus, the eighth prayer . . . in the Salisbury Primer, 1555, begins thus:—“O blessed Jesu! . . . I beseech thee for the bitterness of the ayell and gall that thou tasted,” &c.’ Singer (ed. 2): It was a fashion of the gallants of Shakespeare’s time to do some extravagant feat as a proof of their love in honor of their mistresses, and among other the swallowing of some nauseous potion was the most frequent. . . . In Thomas’s Ital. Dict., 1562, we have ‘Assetio, Eyell,’ and Florio renders the same word by Wormwood. Dyce: ‘For my own part I certainly believe that eisel is meant here the word (and it was common enough formerly) is' spelled Eysell in the 111th Sonnet, ed. 1609. 'In the "hyperbolical" passages cited by Malone, what rivers do those poets mention? The Rhine, the Thames, the Meander, the Euphrates,—and not such obscure streams as the Yssel, the existence of which the commentators had some difficulty in detecting.' Collier says that the (MS) makes no change in Esile. Grant White confesses himself unable to conjecture what the word means; if a river be intended, 'we must regard the word as a remnant of a play, or tale, unknown to us, which preceded Shakespeare's tragedy.' In N. & Qu. (Aug. 10, 1872), John de Soyres says that he remembers in a book of Scandinavian legends an account of Thor's trials of strength with the Giants, and that one of these trials was to drink a lake Esyl dry, and suggests that this is Hamlet's allusion. The Clarendon Editors consulted Mr Magnússon on this point, and he writes as follows: 'No such lake as Esyl is known to Norse mythology or folklore. Thor's only trial at drinking an insoluble draught was at Ugarðalokí's, where he had to empty a horn the other end of which mouthed into the sea: in consequence, he only achieved drinking the ocean down to the ebb mark.' The citation from the 111th Sonnet convinces Moberly that the same word there, is used here; Moberly adds: 'a large draught of vinegar would be very dangerous to life.' There yet remain, however, four interpretations to be mentioned. First: In N. & Qu. (Oct. 5, 1872) John Kershaw calls attention to a passage in Fletcher's Wife for a Month, IV, iv [p. 566, ed. Dyce], where Alphonso [who is burning up with poison and indulges in the most extravagant figures of speech] says: 'I'll lie upon my back, and swallow vessels. 'What more probable, therefore, than that Fletcher's "swallow vessels" had its origin in Shakespeare's "drinke up vessels" of Q1?" Second: Tschirschwitz prints Eysil in his text, and explains it as Euphorbia Eysila, spurge, a poisonous plant, whose juice was employed anciently as an emetic. Third: Schmidt (Sh. Lexicon, s. v. Eysell): 'Hamlet's questions are apparently ludicrous, and drinking vinegar, in order to exhibit deep grief by a wry face, seems much more to the purpose than drinking up rivers. As for the crocodile, it must perhaps be remembered that it is a mourning animal.' Fourth: The late Rev. J. B. Dykes, Mus. Doc. (in a MS note sent to me by Dr Ingleby), suggests the old English word isyl, signifying after, mentioned in Halliwell's Archais and Provincial Dict. s. v. Isles [where Halliwell cites: 'Isyl of fyre, favilla,' Fr. Parv. p. 266]. 'One might possibly extract a meaning out of this: "feeding on ashes," or swallowing flame; but this again is far-fetched and impossible.' In conclusion, the present Editor believes Eysill and Eysile to be misprints for Eyself.

270-276. This...drooping] Caldecott, who follows the Ff in giving these lines to the King, thinks this distribution may be justified on the ground that the King was fearful lest Laertes’s rage and rebellion should break out anew; and that his interference would be more likely to have weight with Laer. than that of the Queen, and after what had been concerted between him and Laer., his affected tenderness for Ham. would be perfectly understood. Knight: The assignment in the Ff of so beautiful and tender an image as that of ‘the female dove’ to a man represented as a coarse sensualist proceeds from a typographical error.

274-276. Anon...drooping] Collier (Notes, &c., ed. 2, p. 445): A new prefix by the (MS) assigns these lines to the Queen, while the preceding are given to the King. It seems likely that the King should interpose to tell the spectators of the funeral, ‘This is mere madness, And thus a while the fit will work on him.’ In some consistency with this view, the King just afterwards desires Hor. to follow Ham., who has rushed out. [Collier, in his ed. 2, adopted this distribution of the speeches.]

275. When that] Burburton reads E’er that, because ‘it is the patience of birds, during incubation, that is here spoken of. The pigeon generally sits upon two eggs, and her young when first disclosed are covered with a yellow down.” Heath (p. 547): The young nestlings of the pigeon when first disclosed stand in need of the kindly warmth of the hen for a considerable time. Steevens: During three days after she has hatched her couplets, the pigeon never quits her nest, except for a few minutes in quest of a little food for herself; as all her young require in that early state is to be kept warm, an office which she never entrusts to the male. Johnson: Perhaps it should be E’er yet. Yet and ye are easily confounded.

279, 280. Let ... day] CALDECOTT: 'Things have their appointed course, nor have we power to divert it,' may be the sense here conveyed, though the proverb is usually applied to those who for a time fill stations to which their merits give them no claim. TSCHICHTWITZ detects here a reference to Laer, the King, and to Ham. himself. 'Let the herculean power of Laer do what it may, and the cat, which creeps stealthily in the dark, mew, the faithful dog will have his turn at last.'

280. day] B. STREE'r (Athenaum, 5 Sept. 1868): 'These lines are so familiar that we pay little attention to their wording, and what seems the correct reading, 'dog will have its day,' has not been suspected. That it is day, and not 'day,' appears so probable as to be almost certain if we consider that a dog might have its day of popularity without any detract from a very Hercules,—at least without any expressed disparagement of him; the idea is the expression of detract on the part of an inferior against his better. Each animal severally employing its natural utterances in carping at worthiness; the cat mewing its civilities, the dog barking its dislike. In The Athenaum, 3 Oct. 1868, 'A. O. S.' showed that the phrase is older than Sh. by giving an extract from a letter from the Princess Elizabeth to her sister, Queen Mary: '——as a doghe hath a day, so may I,' &c. In The Athenaum, 19 Nov. 1870, P. A. DANIEL adduced three other instances of the use of the phrase. In The Interlude (printed in 1573), entitled New Custom, II, iii: 'Well if it chance that a dogge hath a day,' &c. Also, in Jonson's Tale of a Tub, II, i: 'A man hath his hour, and a dog his day.' This was written in 1663, 'later,' adds Daniel, 'than Hamlet, no doubt, but Jonson would scarcely have adopted a meaningless bit of slang.' ELZE (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, Bd. xi) adds a fourth example from Summer's Last Will and Testament, ed. Dodsley, vol. ix, p. 37.

285. living] CLARENDON: Perhaps it is used by the speaker in a double sense; first, that of enduring, as the Queen would understand it; secondly, Laer. would be cognizant of the deeper meaning, by which the life of Ham. is menaced.
1. sir] TSCHISCHWITZ calls attention to the distant tone with which Ham. speaks to Hor.; twice in the first four lines, and afterwards, also, he addresses him as Sir; furthermore, throughout the dialogue the frequent omission of the personal pronoun (as 'had my desire,' &c.), and the more frequent use of participial and infinitive clauses, justify the suspicion that the first fifty-five lines are not Shakespeare's.
6. mutineris] MALONE. For mutiner or mutiner; see the verb in III, iv, 83.

mutinous or disorderly sailors anciently were linked together. The word is derived from Bilboes, a place in Spain, where instruments of steel were fabricated in the utmost perfection. To understand Shakespeare’s allusion completely, it should be known that, as these fetters connect the legs of the offenders very close together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Ham., in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep. Every motion of one must disturb his partner in confinement. The bilboes are still shown in the Tower of London among the other spoils of the Spanish Armada.

6. Rashly] Johnson: Ham., delivering an account of his escape, begins with saying. That he rashly—, and then is carried into a reflection upon the weakness of human wisdom. I rashly—praised be rashness for it—Let us not think these events casual, but let us know, that is, take notice and remember, that we sometimes succeed by indiscretion when we fail by deep plots, and infer the perpetual superstendence and agency of the Divinity. The observation is just, and will be allowed by every human being who shall reflect on the course of his own life. Tyrwhitt suggested that the rest of Hamlet’s speech after ‘Rashly,’ and Horatio’s reply, ‘That is most certain,’ should be put in a parenthesis, so that ‘Rashly’ may be joined in construction with ‘in the dark I groped,’ &c. He also reads: ‘And praised be rashness, for it lets us know,’ and does not put a period after ‘will’ at the end of the speech, but prints ‘will;—’. Although Staunton in a note said that he agreed with Tyrwhitt’s suggestion, he nevertheless did not conform his text thereto. Undoubtedly there is force in Tyrwhitt’s arrangement. Collier: The reasoning in this passage is consecutive in Hamlet’s mind, but, perhaps, hardly so in his expressions. Tschischwitz follows Tyrwhitt, except that he prints ‘for it let us know,’ because ‘let’ is clearly the perfect tense, since Ham. is speaking of an act that is past.

6—11. Strachey (p. 93): That is to say, that when we have exhausted all our powers of thought and reasoning upon the consideration of the course we should pursue, and when it yet remains dark to us,—sickliked o’er with the pale cast of thought,—then a higher wisdom and providence than our own will assuredly come to our aid, and employ some apparently unimportant accident,—something which to us seems merely a rashness or indiscretion,—to strike the hour and give command for action. This is Hamlet’s final, crowning, discovery; a discovery which every man of Hamlet’s tendency of mind must make for himself before it is possible for him to turn his intellectual powers to practical account and to make his philosophical speculations available to the every-day service of God and man. Till such a man has learnt the value of accidents in breaking the thread of his meditations when it is spun long enough, and has formed the habit of seizing and using these accidents, he must remain an unpractical visionary.

8. Our] Warburton prints: ‘Rashness . . . lets us know; Or indiscretion, &c., and vaguely interprets, ‘Rashness acquaints us with what we cannot penetrate to by plots.’ Heath (p. 547) exposed the futility of this change.
When our deep plots do fail; and that should teach us
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Del. Sta.

9. fail] MALONE thinks that fail and 'fail' were by no means likely to have been confounded; he therefore adheres in the Fl, and cites Ant. & Cle. II, vii, 88.
CALDEOCTT says that fail means 'lose their spirit, poignancy, and virtue; become abortive.' DYCE (in his first ed. retaining fail in his text) cites the parallel phrase:
'And if I fail not in my deep intent,' Rich. III: I, i, 149. COLLIER (ed. 2): Very possibly 'fail' of the (MS) is the true word. CLARENDON interprets fail: 'to grow vapid, and tasteless, like wine; hence to become vain and worthless,' and cites the passage from Ant. & Cle. cited by Malone. INGLETON (The Sh. Fabrications, p. 115) suggests that fail and 'fail' were used as synonymous by Sh., and cites in proof Com. of Err. I, ii, 37; and Merry Wives, I, i, 262; and Sir John Oldcastle:
'London, you say, is safely look'd unto, Alas, poor rebels, there your aid must fail.'
In a note on 'if ye fail in't' in The Two Noble Kinsmen, III, vi, 236, LITTLEDALE says that Inglebey has confirmed him in thinking that 'fail,' and not fail, is the right reading in that passage, and he gives a fuller note from Inglebey than is contained in The Sh. Fabrications cited above, as follows: Compare line 272 [of this same scene in The Two Noble Kinsmen]: 'Let it not fail aye, Sir.' There are remarkable instances of the use of this intransitive verb as a synonym of fail. SH. affords us only two certain examples of this: 'her better judgement May fail to match you with her country forms And happily repent.'—Oth. III, iii, 237. Here 'fall' is not happen (Schmidt, wrongly, begin, get into), but fail. [The second instance is the present passage in Hamlet, where] fall is nonsense; and fail makes sense. Fail, of course, is the opposite of succeed. Now our word for this is 'fail.' There is also one example in The London Prodigal, and two in Isaiah, xxxi, 3, and lvii, 14, 15. [DYCE disapproved of this suggestion of Ingleby's. Ed.]

10. ends] STEEVENS: Dr Farmer informs me that these words are merely technical. A wool-man, butcher, and dealer in skelters, lately observed to him that his nephew (an idle lad) could only assist him making them: 'he could rough-hew them, but I was obliged to shape their ends.' Whoever recollects the profession of Shakespeare's father will admit that his son might be no stranger to such terms. I have frequently seen packages of wool pinned up with skelters. CALDEOCTT says that the phrase is doubtless technical, in so far as it is drawn from a handicraft, and that, as the use of tools is general, the phrases belonging to them pass into general use. KNIGHT fears Farmer's suggestion; and HUNTER (ii, 264) says 'the sooner it is expunged the better. Rough-hew is not and never was technical. It is a common English word applicable to all kinds of work where there is room for ordinary manual labor before the master comes and applies a skilful hand. Thus, in Falsgrave's Table of Verbs, 1530: 'I rough-hew a piece of timber to make an ymage of;' Florio, 1598: "Abbozare, to rough hew any first draught, to bungle ill-favouredly."' STAUNTON has a note to the same effect, and cites Baret's Akbarie.

Groped I to find out them; had my desire,

22. _bugs._ CLARENDON: Bugbears, objects of terror. Compare _Wint. Tale_, III, ii, 93. In Coverdale's translation of the _Psalms_ (Ps. xc, or according to the present numbering xc, 5) we find: 'So y' thou shalt not need to be arrayed for any bugges by night ner for arrowe that flyeth by daye.' In Cotgrave 'Goblin' and 'Bug' are given as translations of the French _Gobelin._
23. _bated._ MALONE: Without any abatement or intermission of time. CLARENDON: The execution must follow immediately without any exception of leisure.
29. _villainies._ For other instances of the confusion of _villain_ and _villainie_ in the Folio, see WALKER (Crit. ii, 44).
30. 31. _prologue . . . play._ THEOBALD paraphrased his emendation (which he says he owed in part to Warburton and Bishop) thus: Being in their snares, e're I could make a Prologue (take the least previous step) to ward off danger, they had begun the play (put their schemes into action) which was to terminate in my destruction. Warburton: They had begun to _act_, to my destruction, before I knew there was a Play towards. Ere I could mark the prologue. Heath (p. 549) agrees with his predecessors in thinking that 'They' refers to 'villains,' not to 'brains,' and paraphrases: Before I could take the very first step towards forming my own scheme, they had already proceeded a considerable way in the execution of theirs. Johnson was the first to refer 'They' to its right antecedent, 'brains':

'Before he could summon his faculties, and propose to himself what should be done, a complete scheme of action presented itself to him. His mind operated before he had excited it.' Caldecott returns to Heath's interpretation, as do Delius and Elze, but, with these exceptions, all the rest follow Johnson. Clarke sees herein a vivid picture of Shakespeare's own mode of composition, his teeming brains beginning a play, and seeing all its scope and bearings, ere he had well penned the opening words. Moberly: 'Before I formed my real plan, my brains had done the work. This line should be carefully remarked. Ham. writes the commission under a strong impulse rather of imagination than will, the ingenuity of the trick captivating him. Then the encounter with the pirate puts an end to the chance of undoing it; and thus he is driven, somewhat uneasily, to justify his action to Hor.
As the latter receives his narrative with something like surprise, and even with a touch of compassion, we may conclude with safety that Hamlet's kindly nature would have cancelled the letters but for the accident which hindered his doing so.'

33. _statists_  _Steevens_: Statesmen. Blackstone: Most of the great men of Shakespeare's time, whose autographs have been preserved, wrote very bad hands; their secretaries very neat ones. Ritson: 'I have in my time, (says Montaigne) seen some, who by writing did earnestly get both their titles and living, to disavow their apprenissage, marre their pen, and affect the ignorance of so vulgar a qualite.'
Florio's translation, 1603, p. 125.

36. _yeoman's service_  _Steevens_: The ancient yeomen were famous for their military valor. 'These were the goode archers in times past,' says Sir Thomas Smith, 'and the stable troop of footmen that affraid all France.' Clarendon:
They composed the mass of the infantry. Their formidable character is mentioned by Bacon in his Essay: Of the true greatness of Kingdomes and Estates, p. 122, ed.

enmities,' i.e. as peace should intervene and prevent enmities. He did not repeat these suggestions in his ed., but adopted Warburton's emendation, and justifies it in a note which he attributes to Warburton: 'The poet without doubt wrote, 'And stand a Comere,' i.e. a guarantee, a common mother. Nothing can be more picturesque than this image of Peace's standing, drest in her wheaten garland, between the two Princes, and extending a hand to each. We thus frequently see her on Roman coins.'

But Warburton, in his ed., goes further, and says that Comere here means 'a trafficker in love, one who brings people together, a procurer.' [Cotgrave sustains him in this meaning.] Caipell (Notes, &c., i, 147) was taken by this allusion to Peace as represented on coins, and so adopted Comere. Heath (p. 549) well Interpret:s: 'As a comma stands between two several members of a sentence, without separating them otherwise than by distinguishing the one from the other, in like manner peace personified, or the Goddess of Peace, is understood to stand between the amities of the two kings.' [Dyce (ed. ii) cites this paraphrase of Heath's, and adds: 'Perhaps so.'] Johnson: The comma is the note of connection and continuity of sentences; the period is the note of abruption and disjunction. Sh. bad it perhaps in his mind to write,—That unless England complied with the mandate, war should put a period to their amity; he altered his mode of diction, and thought that, in an opposite sense, he might put, that peace should stand a comma between their amities. Becket (Shakespeare's Himself Again, i, 73) suggested, 'And stand a co-mate, i.e. 'companion; peace should be associate with them.' Stainton considered this 'co-mate within the range of possibility.' And Elze (Athenaeum, 11 Aug. 1866) lit upon the same conjecture independently of Becket, and thinks that this coincidence adds strength. It should be added that Elze, one of the very best English scholars in Germany, had merely heard at the time of Becket's conjecture, and had no knowledge of the quality of the rest of that wild 'Nonsense Book.' Tschischwitz follows Becket. Caldecott cites: 'I feare the point of the sword will make a comma to your cunning.'—N. Breton's Packet of Letters, p. 23, 1637.
Hunter (ii, 264) thinks Sh. meant to ridicule such an absurd expression in some speech or document of the time. Singer (ed. ii) reads, 'And stand a co-mere,' i.e.
's a mark defining them. Mere is a boundary mark, the lapis terminalis of the ancients; and it should be remembered that the god of mere or bounds, Terminus,
And many such-like Ases of great charge,

was wont to end the strifes and controversies of people in dividing their lands.' To this suggestion Dyck (ed. 1) adds: 'But our author's text is not to be amended by the insertion of words coined expressly for the occasion; and to me at least all this tampering of critics with the passage does not prove that it is corrupt.' White finds 'comma' incomprehensible, and adopts Hanmer's reading, cement, which 'is supported, in accent and all, by Ant. & Cleo. III, ii, 29. And see Octavia's subsequent description of herself, scene iv, as standing between, praying for both parts. Clarke: 'Comma' is here employed as the term applied by theoretical musicians to express 'the least of all the sensible intervals in music,' showing the exact proportions between accords. Tuners of organs and piano-fortes use the word 'comma' thus to the present day. The term in its musical sense is fully explained in Hawkins's Hist. of Music (pp. 28, 122, 410, ed. Novello, 1853). From the context of the present passage, there is far greater probability that Sh. had in view a term referring to concord, than one alluding to the method of stopping; and we think that he here uses the word 'comma' to express a link of amicably harmonious connection. That he was well acquainted with various technical terms in music we have several proofs in his writings. Bailey (i, 55): 'That Peace wearing a garland should stand as a punctuation-mark between persons or abstractions of any kind is as pure nonsense as ever flowed from penman or printer. I suggest, 'And hold her olive 'tween their amities.' Compare Shakespeare's use of 'the olive' elsewhere in 2 Hen. IV, and Twelfth Night. The transformation of holds her olive into 'stands a comma' arose 'by a very simple blunder. It is clearly a case of the incorporation of a marginal direction into the text. The composer had before him the genuine line, and put it accurately into type, except that he omitted to place the mark of elision (') above torrent, and the proof-reader wrote the correction in full, 'a comma,' in the margin; this the composer inserted in the text under the misconception that 'a comma' was to be substituted for 'her olive.' And thus 'hold a comma' was next changed into 'stand a comma.' In Q, 'there is no elision mark [if Bailey had said comma here, would it not have revealed the fallacy of his whole theory? would the proof-reader have called for 'comma' when he meant an apostrophe? Ed.] before torrent, which is just what my theory requires; for, supposing the error to have been made originally in Q, it is obvious that the words a comma would be introduced into the text instead of the elision mark.' Cartwright (New Readings, &c., p. 37) proposed, 'And stand as one atween;' two years later (N. & Qu., 20 June, 1868) he conjectured, 'And stand as concord.' J. Wetherell (N. & Qu., 27 June, 1868): Read: 'And stand at one between their majesties.'

47. shriving-time] Hunter (ii, 265): This was a term in common use for any short period. All Ham. meant was that they should be put to instant death.

47. allow'd] Hammond (Some Remarks, &c., p. 46): The punishment of Ros. and Guil. was just, because they had devoted themselves to the service of the Usurper in whatever he should command. Malone: From The Hystorie of Hamlet, it appears that the faithful ministers of Pengon were not unacquainted with the import of the letters they bore [see Vol. II, p. 103]. Sh. probably meant to describe their representatives, Ros. and Guil., as equally guilty. So that Hamlet's procuring their execution, though certainly not absolutely necessary to his own safety, does not appear to have been a wanton and unpromtured cruelty. Stevens: I apprehend that a critic and a juryman are bound to form their opinions on what they see and hear in the cause before them, and not to be influenced by extraneous particulars unsupported by legal evidence in open court. I persist in observing, that from Shakespeare's drama no proofs of the guilt of Ros. and Guil. can be collected. They may be convicted by the old Hystorie; but if the tragedy forbears to criminate, it has no right to sentence them. This is sufficient for the commentator's purpose. It is not his office to interpret the plays of Sh. according to the novels on which they are founded,—novels which the poet sometimes followed, but as often materially deserted. Perhaps he never confined himself strictly to the plan of any one of his originals. His negligence of poetic justice is notorious; nor can we expect that he who was content to sacrifice the pious Oph. should have been more scrupulous about the worthless lives of Ros. and Guil. Therefore I assert that in the tragedy before us their deaths appear wanton and unpromtured; and the critic, like Bayes, must have recourse to somewhat long before the beginning of the play to justify the conduct of its hero. Pye (p. 326): There is not one word uttered by Ros. and Guil. throughout the play that does not proclaim them to the most superficial observer as creatures of the King, purposely employed to betray Ham., their friend and fellow-student. Strachey (p. 96): Something more than Hamlet's own preservation is at stake; he is the representative and avenger of the rights of the crown and laws of Denmark, outraged by a murderer and a usurper, (for he was only elected because he contrived to murder the rightful possessor at a moment when his natural heir was absent); and he has to act under those circumstances, which at rare and long intervals in the history of every country, call on some man to maintain the spirit of the laws by disregarding for a moment their letter. It is Hamlet's duty to avenge the crown

63. thinks't thee] The editors who follow Q, interpret this as equivalent to 'bethink thee.' WALKER in dealing with this passage exhibited, as his admirable editor, Lettsom, well says, profound critical sagacity, and, almost entirely unaided by any old copies, put aside ancient and modern corruptions, and made his way at once to the genuine reading: 'It may be observed' (Vers. 281) 'that thinks it thee also occurs in the Elizabethan poets in the sense of μνον μονα κα.' He then cites the present passage, and gives the reading of the present text; and also corrects the same phrase in Cartwright, The Ordinary, III, ii (Dodsley, x. 216): "Little think'st thee how diligent thou art To little purpose." Thinks't thee, of course. (I understand, by the way, that the thinks in methinks is, originally and etymologically, not the same with our present verb to think; but that it is a corruption of another verb signifying to seem; so that methinks is as it appears to me.) CLARENDON offers another solution: Perhaps the true reading is 'thinks thee,' the final s of the Quarto being mistaken for c. The word 'think' in this passage is not the same in origin as 'think' used personally, but comes from Anglosaxon thincon, to seem, appear, which is used impersonally with all personal pronouns. The other word is thencon, to think, and the distinction is maintained in the German denken. In Rich. III: III, i, 63: 'Where it seems best unto your royal self, for seems,' which is the reading of the earliest Qq, the later editions have 'thinkst' or 'think'st.'

63. stand me] ABBOTT, § 204: This phrase cannot be explained, though it is influenced, by the custom of transposition. Most inextricable confusion seems to have been made by the Elizabethan authors between two distinct idioms: (1) 'it stands on' (adv.), or 'at hand,' or 'upon' (comp. 'instant,' ψοθαινί, i.e. 'it is of importance,' 'it concerns,' 'it is a matter of duty,' and (2) 'I stand upon' (adj.), i.e. 'I in-sist upon.' In (1) the full phrase would be: 'it stands on, upon, to me,' but, owing to the fact that 'to me' or 'me' (the dative inflection) is unemphatic, and 'upon' is emphatic and often used at the end of the sentence, the words were transposed into: 'it stands me upon.' 'Me' was thus naturally taken for the object of upon. [In the present passage] it means 'it is imperative on me.' CLARENDON: The construction is here interrupted by the parenthesis.

that has been wrought in Ham.; then, for the first time, we perfectly comprehend his quiet jesting with the Clown, his tranquil musings with Hor. The man is transformed by a great resolve: his mind is made up! The return of the vessel from England will be the signal for his own execution, and therefore the moral problem is solved; the only chance of saving his life from a lawless murderer is to slay him;

80. Osric] C. Elliot Browne (The Athenæum, 29 July, 1876): This was a

88. chough] Johnson says this is a kind of jackdaw. Harting (p. 115) calls it the Red-legged Crow, or the Cornish Cough, as it is sometimes called, from its being considered a bird peculiar to the south-west coast of England, though now known to be much more widely distributed. As to its pronunciation, Skinner derives the name _a sono naturali quem avis edit_, and Cotgrave translates _Coust_ (clearly a case of onomatopoeia), and _Canouette_, by A Cough or Jacke Daw. Finally, Ritson (p. 92) says that the name of the Cornish bird is pronounced by the natives _chew_, which is conclusive. Caldecott doubts much if, in the present instance, from its association with wealth, it have any relation to that bird, but inclines to think it should be _chuff_. [Is not Caldecott right here? The _chew_ is, perhaps, applicable to Osr. on the score of chattering, but how about the spacious possession of dirt, the special application made by Ham.? If _chuff_ be here meant

GIFFORD (Massinger's Duke of Milan, III, i, p. 279, ed. Gifford) says 'chuff is always used in a bad sense, and means a coarse, unmannured clown, at once sordid and wealthy.' D'YCE (Gloss. s. v. chuff) adds instances corroborating Gifford from A Gorgious Gallery of Gallant Inventions, 1578, and Marlowe's Ovid's Elidies. Whether it be chow or chuff, the whole speech is puzzling. ED.

WALKER (Crit. ii, 322) follows the Q4, because 'for' of the F1 is so frequently mistranscribed for or. LETTSOM upholds the F1. DANIEL (p. 76) suspects that Hamlet's speech should end at 'hot,' and that 'for my complexion' is a petty oath ('Fore my complexion'), which should be given to Osr. to say 'remember not your courtesy,' because he could not possibly have said 'remember your courtesy' when he wanted Osr. to put his hat on. Malone be-thieved that courtesy meant to uncover the head, and accordingly in Love's Lab. Lost, V, i, 103, he added not in Armado's speech, 'I do beseech thee remember not thy courtesy; I beseech thee apparel thy head,' and Dyce shared this opinion, for he considered the 'not' as indispensable. STANTON discarded the 'not' in Love's Lab. Lost, and in a note on the passage says: 'Whatever may have been the meaning of the words, or whether they were a mere complimentary periphrasis, without any precise signification, the following quotations prove beyond a question that the old text is right, and that the expression refers to the Pedant's standing bareheaded:
—"I pray you be remembered, and cover your head."—Lusty Juvenius, ed. Hawkins, p. 142. "Pray you remember your court'y. . . . Nay, pray you be cover'd."
—Every Man in His Humour, I, i, ed. Gifford." GRANT WHITE (The Galaxy, Oct. 1869) upholds Stanton, adding: It seems clear that Osric's completed speech would have been, 'remember your courtesy.' The phrase was a conventional one for 'be covered.' But why? The removal of the hat, in Shakespeare's time, even more than now, was regarded as a mark of courtesy. I am unable to offer any explanation of the phrase which is acceptable even to myself. I can only suggest that the difficulty lies not in courtesy, but in some peculiar and, perhaps, elliptical use of remember. ELZE suggests 'remember thy bonnet.'

105. for mine ease] FARMER: This seems to have been the affected phrase of the time. Thus, in Marston's Malcontent, 1604: 'I beseech you, sir, be covered.— No, in good faith for my ease!' And in other places. MALONE: It appears to have been the common language of ceremony in our author's time. 'Why do you stand bareheaded? (says one of the speakers in Florio's Second Frutes, 1591.) you do yourself wrong. Pardon me, good sir, (replies his friend;) I do it for my ease.'

DELIUS thinks it equivalent to different excellences. CLARENDON interprets: 'distinctions marking him out from the rest of men. This affected phrase was probably suggested by the heraldic use of the word.'

108. feelingly] JENNENS and COLLIER agree in thinking that Q3, Q2 may possibly be right, with an allusion to the praises which a seller gives to his wares. STEEVENS cites Love's Lab. IV, iii, 240. [Indeed, no interpretation, however far-fetched, would seem out of place in this scene; perhaps the farther the better.] CALDECOTT interprets it [and Dyce (Strictures, &c., p. 191) says: 'rightly'], 'to speak with insight and intelligence.'

109. card or calendar] JOHNSON: The general preceptor of elegance; the card by which a gentleman is to direct his course; the calendar by which he is to choose his time, that what he does may be both excellent and seasonable. CLARENDON: One of Greene's pamphlets (1584) is called 'Glyddoni, The cardes of Fancie.'

113. yet but yau] JOHNSON: I believe raw to be the right word; it is a word of great latitude; it signifies unripe, immature, thence unformed, imperfect, unskilful. The best account of him would be imperfect in respect of his quick sail. The phrase 'quick sail' was, I suppose, a proverbial term for activity of mind. HEATH: The meaning undoubtedly is that Laer. was but young (raw) in proportion to the quick progress he had made in all gentlemanly accomplishments. CALDECOTT: Raw is unready, untrained, and awkward. Compare Per. IV, ii, 60; 'As You Like It,' III, ii, 76. DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 220): 'Nothing, I think, can be more certain than that the passage should stand thus: " and it [which was often mistaken by our early printers for 'yet,' perhaps because it was written yet] but yau neither in respect of his quick sail." " To yau (as a ship), hoc illuc vacillare, capite nutare."

—Coles's Dict The substantive 'yau' occurs in Massinger: "O, the yau's that she will make! Look to your stern, dear mistress, and steer right, Here's that will work as high as the Bay of Portugal."—Very Woman, III, v; Works, iv, 293, ed. 1805, where Gifford remarks: 'A yau is that unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when, in steering, she inclines to the right or left of her course.''

ELZE thinks the possible solution of this difficulty is to consider 'yau' as a transitive verb, and he thus interprets: 'An inventory of Laertes s excellences would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; yet it would not let it stagger hither and thither (like a badly-steered ship), in view of his quick sail.' A quick-sailing ship holds a steadfast course than one that sails slowly. STAUNTON says he must admit his inability to understand Dyce's reading, and adds: 'Yet' is certainly suspicious, but the word displaced we have always thought was wht, not wh, and the drift of Hamlet's jargon to be this: his qualifications are so numerous, and so far surpass all ordinary reckoning, that memory would grow giddy in cataloguing, and wht be distanced in attempting to keep pace with them. WHITE: There seems to be no doubt that 'yet' was mistaken for 'yet.' CLARKE believes raw to be used in the same sense as in 'As You Like It,' and interprets: 'your description is but inefficient and inadequate after all.' ABBOTT, § 1:8: The ellipsis of the negative explains 'neither.' That is, 'do nothing but lag clumsily behind neither.' 'Neither,' for our either, is in Shakespeare's manner, after a negative expressed or implied. TSCHISCHWITZ says raw is merely a misprint for row, and so gives it in his text, and thus interprets: 'Memory, even with the help of arithmetic, cannot overtake this swift sailer, but can only row while he sails. At the present day we should say: and yet but sail neither in respect of his full steam.' CLARENDON: If this passage stands as Sh. wrote it, any meaning it may have has defied the penetration of commentators to detect. If 'yet' is a mistake for yet or yt, of his quick sail. But, in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article, and his infusion of such death and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror, and who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Sale has reference to the value, and speedy sale of the qualifications, of Laer.

115. article] Johnson: This is obscure. I once thought it might have been 'of great altitude,' but I suppose it means 'a soul of large comprehension, of many contents;' the particulars of an inventory are called articles. Caldecott defines it: 'Of great account or value.'

115. infusion . . . rareness] Johnson: 'Death' is dearness, value, price, and his internal qualities of such value and rarity. Caldecott: The qualities with which he is imbued or tinctured are of a description so scarce and choice. Clarendon defines 'infusion,' essential qualities.

117. trace] Clarendon: Follow. Compare 1 Hen. IV: III, i, 48; and Gorges's Trans. of Lucan, bk 1, p. 36 (ed. 1614): 'And in their turnes next to them trace Prelates of an inferior place.'

123. Is't . . . tongue] Johnson: This may mean, Might not all this be understood in plainer language? But then, 'you will do it, sir, really,' seems to have no use, for who could doubt but plain language would be intelligible? I would therefore read: 'Is't possible not to be understood in a mother tongue?' You will do it, sir, really. Heath (p. 550): Read, 'It is not possible to understand in another tongue.' That is, such language as this is the only one which communicates ideas.
Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman? 125

to us. It is spoken ironically. JENNIENS: This speech is addressed to Osr. Hor. finding him posed says, 'Is't not possible to understand? In another tongue you will do't, sir, really,' i.e. Are you defeated at your own weapons? Can't you understand your own kind of jargon? If so, you had better speak in another tongue, make use of common sense without any flourishes, and you'll not be in danger of being put out of countenance. MALONE: This speech is addressed to Ham. 'Another tongue' does not mean, as I conceive, plainer language (as Dr Johnson supposed), but language so fantastical and affected as to have the appearance of a foreign tongue; and in the following words Hor., I think, means to praise Ham. for imitating this kind of babble so happily. I suspect, however, that the poet wrote: 'Is't possible not to understand in a mother tongue?' The very same error occurs in Bacon's Advancement of Learning, 410, 1605, b. ii, p. 60: '—the art of grammar, whereof the use in another tongue is small, in a foreine tongue more.' The author, in his table of Errata, says it should have been printed,—in mother tongue. STAUNTON: Should we not read, 'in's mother tongue?' WALKER (Crit. iii, 273) Surely read, 'a mother tongue,' with Johnson. [TSCHISCHWITZ adopted it.] HUDSON: Hor, means to imply, that what with Osric's euphuiism, and what with Hamlet's catching of Osric's style, they are not speaking in a tongue that can be understood; and he hints that they try another tongue, that is, the common one. MOBERLY: 'Can't you understand your own absurd language on another's tongue? Use your wits, sir, and you'll soon be at the bottom of it.'

124. You... really] HEATH (p. 550): Undoubtedly read, 'You do't, sir, rarely,' i.e. You have exactly hit upon the humour of this language. HEUSS: This is undoubtedly addressed to Osr. To Ham, he would not have used 'sir,' but 'my lord.'

132. approve] JOHNSON: If you knew I was not ignorant, your esteem would not much advance my reputation. To 'approve' is to recommend to approbation. SINGER (ed. 2): 'If you did, it would not tend much toward proving me, or confirming me.' What Ham would have added, we know not; but surely Shakespeare's use of the word 'approve,' upon all occasions, is against Johnson's explanation of it. CLARENDON: 'Would not be much to my credit.'
Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That’s two of his weapons; but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses; against the which he has imponed, as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, it seems here used fantastically for that which challenges it merendo, i.e. ‘merit,’ and means: ‘In this his particular excellence.’

142. wagered] WHITE: The reading of the Ef is in perfect accordance with Shakespeare’s usage, and that of his contemporaries. So in Cym. I, iv, 144.

143. imponed] JOHNSON: Perhaps it should be deponed. So Hudibras: ‘I would upon this cause depone, As much as any I have known.’ But, perhaps, ‘imponed’ is pledged, impawned, so spelt to ridicule the affectation of uttering English words with French pronunciation. COLLIER and DYCE (Gloss.) agree in accepting this explanation: that it is Osric’s affected pronunciation of impawned.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more germane to the matter if we could carry cannon by our sides; I would it might be hangers till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceived carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this 'imposed,' as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, sir, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would

Nor can I comprehend how, in a dozen, there can be twelve to nine. The passage is of no importance; it is sufficient that there was a wager. MALONE: The King hath laid that come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How if I answer No?

_in a game of a dozen passes, or bouts, Laer. does not exceed you three hits; the King hath laid on the principle of him who makes a bet, with the chance of gaining twelve for nine that he may lose; or the King (by the advantage allowed to Ham.) hath odds, tantamount to four to three. If the words, 'he hath laid on,' refer to Laer., it means that he has laid on the principle of one who undertakes to make twelve passes for nine that his adversary shall make; on the ratio of twelve to nine. Ritson (p. 212) maintains that there were to be but twelve passes in all, and 'Laer., to win, must have got eight hits, whereas Ham. would have won if he had got only five; so that he had clearly the advantage of Laer., in point of number, three whole passes or hits, and the odds were eight to five, which is in the same arithmetical proportion of twelve to nine, in Hamlet's favor before they began to play.' [This is, I think, virtually the same explanation as that given by Elze.]

Seymour (ii, 203): 'If in the dozen passes Ham. shall be hit seven times, and Laer. only three, the King will lose his wager.' Mitford (Gen. Mag. 1845): The reading of the Ff of one for 'laid on' may be an error for won, or on; indeed the whole phrase, 'he hath laid on twelve for nine,' seems very like an interpolation from the margin. One might say that, by a loose manner of speaking, not exceeding three hits may mean not exceeding more than two. It may also be observed that these numbers were probably represented by Arabic figures, and not by letters, and were more liable to be altered and made corrupt. Quarterly Review (March, 1847, vol. lxxix, p. 332): Osr. never stoops to use the language of ordinary mortals. 'He hath laid on twelve for nine' is not he has laid twelve to nine, but he has wagered for nine out of twelve. The King backs Ham. Laer., who is the celebrated fencer of the age, is to give the Prince great odds:--the King stipulates out of the twelve passes for nine hits from Laer. without his being declared winner. So also in the former part of the sentence, 'he shall not exceed you three hits,' does not mean that the sum of Laeret's hits over Hamlet's shall not be more than three. In a dozen passes six hits each would place them on a par, and Osr. calls Laeret's excess the number of hits that he makes above his own half. This, the King bets, will not surpass three, rendering the total amount to nine, which tallies with the other form under which the bet is expressed. Morley: 'Each is to attack twelve times, going on till a hit is made: and Laer. bets that he will hit Ham. twelve times before Ham. can hit him nine times. That is: Ham. has three points given him, and with these odds he trusts that he shall win.' Tschirschitz assumes that 'a dozen' is merely an indefinite number, and gives an elaborate calculation on the basis of twenty-one rounds. [It may be said of all these calculations what Clarendon says of one of them, they are doubtless correct, but do not explain the form in which the wager is put.] Steevens refers this very 'unimportant passage' to the members of the Jockey Club, at Newmarket, 'who on such subjects may prove the most enlightened commentators, and most successfully bestir themselves in the cold unpoetic dabble of calculation.'

177. Iapwing] Johnson: I see no particular propriety in this image. Osr. did not run away till he had finished his business. We may read:—'ram away,' i.e. *This fellow was full of unimportant bustle from his birth.' Jennis: Osr. is shortly after spoken of as 'young Osric,' he may therefore be supposed to be but a half-formed courtier; and under this image of the Iapwing Hor. ridicules his forwardness of talk and self-conceit,—his putting on the courtier before he was properly qualified. Steevens: Thus, in Greene's Never Too Late, 1616: 'Are you no sooner hatched, with the lapwing, but you will run away with the shell on your head?' Malone: In Meres's Wit's Treasury, 1598: 'As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head as soon as she is hatched.' Caldecott: 'He is prematurely hasty, starts almost before he has means, ere he has found legs or message, to carry or be carried.' Clarendon: The lapwing was also a symbol of insincerity, from its habit of alluring intruders from its nest by crying far away from it. Orr was both forward and insincere. [See Harting, Ornithology of Sh., p. 220.]

178. comply] Warburton: The true reading is: compliment, i.e. stand upon ceremony with his dug, to show that he was born a courtier. Capell (i, 148): 'He must have ask'd the dug's pardon before he handl'd it.' Jennens justifies the reading of Q: 'Do you wonder,' says Ham., in effect, 'at his affecting the courtier now? Why he had done it from his very cradle.' Caldecott well paraphrases: He was complaisant with, treated it with apish ceremony. The same idea, and partly the same phrase itself, occurs in Ulpian Fulwel's Arte of Flatterie, 1579: 'Flatterie hath taken such habit in man's affections, that it is in most men altera natura: yes, the very sucking babes hath a kind of adulation towards their nurses for the dugge.'—Preface to the Reader. Reed: 'Comply' is right. So in Fuller's Historie of the Holy Warre, p. 80: 'Some weeks were spent in complying, entertainments, and visiting holy places.' In Reed's Var. 1803 and 1813 he added the remark: 'To compliment was, however, by no means an unusual term in Shakespeare's time.' 'This,' says Caldecott, 'was said [by Reed] in answer to Malone's assertion in the Pseudo-Rowleian controversy, "that the verb, to compliment, was unknown for half a century after Elizabeth's reign." Reed having, however, omitted to produce any instance, and none having been given from any other quarter, we shall instance Lord Burleigh, who died 1598; and who, in his Letter of Advice to his son, says: 'Be sure to keep some great man. ... Compliment him often with many, but small, gifts, and of little charge.' So "free from inhumane susteritie on the one side and voyde of fond and idle complementing indulgence on the other."—Chadwicth's Funeral Sermon, 1613.' [See II, ii, 354; both there and here Singer maintains his interpretation of 'embrace.]

183. fond and winnowed] WARBURTON: 'Fond' should undoubtedly be fann'd, alluding to corn separated by the fan from chaff. The opinions here spoken of may mean the opinions of great men and courtiers, or men separated by their quality from the vulgar, as corn is separated from the chaff. This 'yesty collection' insinuates itself into people of the highest Quality, as yeast into the finest flour. JOHNSON:
'If Q₃ preserved any traces of the original, Sh. wrote "sane and renowned," which is better than "fann'd and winnowed." The meaning is: these men have got the cant of the day, a superficial readiness of slight and cursory conversation, a kind of frothy collection of fashionable prattle which yet carries them through the most select and approving judgements. This airy facility of talk sometimes imposes upon wise men.
Who has not seen this observation verified?' JENNINGS follows Q₄, but modifies it in his text to 'prophan and tres-renowne,' 'which is the French method of forming suppletives, i.e. the most renowned;' and paraphrases: such a superficial collection of knowledge as carries them through the most common (prophan) and even the most renowned opinions, i.e. opinions, or branches of learning, which bring rennown to the learned in them. STEEVES: 'Fond,' i.e. foolish, is evidently opposed to 'winnown,' i.e. sifted, examined. Their conversation was yet successful enough to make them passable not only with the weak, but with those of sounder judgement.
The same opposition in terms is in the readings of the Q₃: prophan and vulgar are opposed to trennoued or thiste renouned. TOLLET: 'Fann'd and 'winnown' occur together in Markham's Husbandry, pp. 18, 76, 77. So also 'fan and wind' in Tro. & Cres. V, iii, 41. CALDECOTT interpreted the phrase: 'All judgements, not the simplest only, but the most sifted and wisest.' DYCE. (Remarks, &c., p. 221) pronounces Warburton's emendation 'admirable,' and one which 'evidently restores the genuine reading.' WHITE (Sh. Schol. p. 422) advocates 'fond and winnowed,' and interprets: 'They go through and through (i.e. they stop at no absurdity in) the most fond (i.e. affected or foolish) and winnowed (i.e. elaborately sought out) opinions.'
But WHITE, having found that 'fan' and 'winnow' are 'often coupled in the writings of Shakespeare's day,' and 'that "fond" (<foolish>) sorts ill with "winnowed" in its figurative sense,' in his subsequent edition agreed with Warburton and Dyce that 'fond' of the Ff is a misprint for fond, and added, 'of the meaning of the passage in this form I am not quite sure, though it is probably to be found in Dr Johnson's paraphrase.' Clarke: 'Probably "fond" is here used to express "fondly cherished," "dearly esteemed," while "winnowed" means "choice," "select." "Fond" is thus used in I, v, 99.' B. Nicholson (N. & Q., 16 Jan. 1864): Ham. of course means that Osr. and his compere have not that inward wit necessary to parley true euphuism, but only the outward trick of the language, which while it passed with folks of like mind, would not stand the trial of better judgement. . . . If for 'winnowed' or tennewed, we read vinnowed or vinnewed—and blue vinnedy is Dorsetshire, and vinnewed is spelt in the Ff of Tro. & Cress. 'whinister,' —we have a change that restores the sense,—a word not incongruous with, but suggested by, the metaphorical yesty collection, and a repetition of that Shakespearian expression, a 'mouldy wit.' . . . The 'yesty collection' is the frothiness of sour and stale beer, which passes with those of corrupted and vitiated taste; but when tried and blown upon by the more sober judgement flies off, and does not remain like the true head of sound liquor or wit.' Subsequently (N. & Q., 31 Dec. 1864), Nicholson added that he had forgotten the variant of vinnewed, which is fennewed or fennewed. 'The last was doubtless the form chosen by Sh. in this passage.' Bailey (ii, 17) changes this whole passage thus: 'only got the tune of the time, and out of the habit of encounter [got] a kind of yesty diction which . . . the most profound and renowned opinions.' In support, he adds: 1. That the verb 'got' governs both the 'tune of the time' and 'a kind of yesty diction,' the latter of which the persons concerned got, 'out of the habit of encounter.' 2. That diction has been used by Ham. just before in the phrase, 'to make true diction of him.' 3. That 'most profound and renowned' comes much nearer the old reading than 'most fond and winnowed.' Besides, most winnowed is not English. We should not say of one sack of wheat amongst several that it was the most winnowed, but that it was the best winnowed. Tschischwitz proposed and adopted in his text: 'profound and winnowed,' on the ground that two opposite ideas, like 'fond' and 'winnowed,' cannot be connected by 'and' so long as 'most,' by qualifying both, combined them in one idea. 'People of Osric's class are like chaff that is to be found in a deep and well-sifted heap of wheat.' Hudson: 'Opinions conceitedly fine and winnowed clean of the dust of common sense; such opinions as are affected by lingual exquisities of all times. Clarendon inclines to Tschischwitz's reading; 'profound and winnowed' as affording a proper contrast with 'yesty collection.' Moreley: 'A set of frothy expressions suited perpetually to express the absurdest and most over-refined notions.'

giving as would perhaps trouble a woman.
Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it. I will forestall their repair hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit; we defy augury; there's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come; the readiness is all. Since no man, of 210 aught he leaves, knows, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.

207. augury] CORNHILL MAGAZINE (‘Presentiments,’ October, 1866, p. 459): This passage is one of the simplest, as it is one of the strongest, proofs of Shakespeare’s belief in presentiments. In all the instances he gives us, the moral to be drawn is that the warning is neglected and the fate comes. At first we might think that Hamlet’s feeling was natural. He had detected the King’s villainy, and he knew his own counterplot would not long be secret. But it is plain that he suspected nothing in the challenge to fence with Laert. He never once examined the foils, or measured them, but picked up the first that came to hand, and took the length on trust. Just before, when Hor. warned him, he had said, ‘The interim is mine,’ and he clearly looked forward to having things his own way till the next news from England. [See Rom. & C. Jul. V, 1, 1.]

208-211. If...betimes?] TSCHISCHWITZ (Sh. Forschungen, i, 62) calls attention to an ‘exactly parallel’ passage in the Dedication to Giordano Bruno’s Candide. By this philosophy my soul is elevated and my capacity for thinking enlarged. But whatsoever may be the appointed hour of that evening which I am awaiting, when the change will take place, I, who am in the night, await the day, and those who are in the day await the night. Everything that exists is either at hand or at a distance, near or far, now or later, instantly or hereafter.’

them? Therefore, come what will, I am prepared.’ Johnson: ‘The reading of the Quarto was right, but in some other copy the harshness of the transposition was softened, and the passage stood thus: Since no man knew ought of what he leaves. For knows was printed in the later copies has by a slight blunder in such typographers. I do not think Warburton’s interpretation of the passage the best that it will admit. The meaning may be this: Since no man knew ought of the state of life which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should he be afraid of leaving life betimes? Why should he dread an early death, of which he cannot tell whether it is an exclusion of happiness or an interception of calamity? I despise the superstition of augury and omens, which has no ground in reason or piety; my comfort is, that I cannot fall but by the direction of Providence. Hamlet’s conjecture is not very reprehensible: Since no man can call any possession certain, what is it to leave? The Ff have received their best interpretation from Caldecott, viz.: ‘Since no man has (i.e. has any secure hold, or can properly be denominated the possessor, of) any portion of that which he leaves, or must leave, behind him, of what moment is it that this leave-taking, or parting with a possession so frail, should be made thus early?’ Collier truly remarks that no old copy is at all well printed in this scene; and Dyce pronounces the present passage suspicious. White thinks the Qq are manifestly wrong. Clarke prefers the Qq on what, I think, is the true ground, so finely paraphrased by Johnson: That it is more characteristic of Ham. to think little of leaving life, because he cannot solve its many mysteries, than because he cannot carry with him life’s goods. Clarke thinks that Johnson’s is perhaps the true reading.

213. pardon] Johnson: I wish Ham. had made some other defence; it is unsuitable to the character of a brave or a good man to shelter himself in falsehood. Seymour (ii, 204) believes that the passage from ‘This presence,’ &c., line 215, down to ‘enemy,’ line 226, is an interpolation. The falsehood contained in it is too ignoble. Walker (Crit. iii, 274): Arrange: ‘—I have done you wrong; but pardon’t, As you’re a gentleman. This presence knows.’ [That is, in two lines, the first ending ‘pardon’t.’ Ed.]

This presence knows,
And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd
With sore distraction. What I have done,
That might your nature, honour, and exception
Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet;
If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,
And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet does it not; Hamlet denies it.
Who does it then? His madness; if't be so,
Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;
His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience,
Let my disclaiming from a purposed evil
Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,

231. brother] HUNTER (ii, 265): The change in Ff might be made by Sh. after he retired to Stratford, the passage as it originally stood coming too near to an incident which had recently occurred in the family of Greville in that neighborhood, where one of them had by misadventure killed his brother with an arrow.

231. nature] STEEVENS: A piece of satire on fantastical honor. Though nature is satisfied, yet he will ask advice of older men of the sword whether artificial honor ought to be contented with Hamlet's submission.
To my revenge; but in my terms of honour
I stand aloof, and will no reconcilement,

248. Very... side] Heath (p. 550) pronounces this passage, as at present punctuated, stark nonsense, which is to be remedied by a comma after 'lord,' and a semicolon after 'laid;' That is: 'Your wager, my lord, is prudently laid; you have given odds to the weaker side.' And the King's reply is in proof: 'But since that time he is greatly improved, therefore we are allowed odds.' Johnson: The odds were on the side of Laer., who was to hit Ham. twelve times to nine. It was perhaps the author's slip. Jennens solved the difficulty, in noting that the odds here alluded to are those that were laid in the wager, viz. the greater value of the King's stake as compared with Laer's, and not to the number of hits, which is what the King refers to in his reply. Ritson computes the value of the King's six Barbary horses in comparison with the rapiers, &c., as about twenty to one, and adds, 'these are the odds here meant.' Moberly: 'I understand that your grace has taken care that points shall be given me; but for all that, I fear that I shall be the weaker. No, replies the King, I have seen you both, and the points given will counterbalance his Paris improvement.'

250. better'd... odds] Jennens: 'Since the wager he gains if he should win is better than what we shall gain if he loses, therefore we have odds, that is, we are not to make as many hits as Laer.' Caldecott: 'Better'd,' i.e. stands higher in estimation. Delius (and Moberly in the preceding note) refer 'better'd' to Laer's proficiency acquired in Paris. Keightley (Expositor, p. 298): If he (i.e. Laer.) was bettered, in the ordinary sense of the word, how could the odds lie against him? You're would give better sense than 'he's;' but it does not satisfy me. A line has evidently been lost, and the latter part may be addressed to the Queen. The lost line may have been something like this: 'Tis true he did neglect his

259. union] Theobald: The finest sort of pearl, which has its place in all crowns and coronets. The King afterwards refers to it, line 269. Malone: Florio, Ital. Dict., 1598, gives 'Unione . . . . . Also a faire, great, orient pearle, called an union.' And Bullokar, Eng. Expositor, 1621, to the same effect. Steevens: See Holland’s trans. of Pliny, p. 255: ' . . . . . . our dainties and delicats here at Rome, have devised this name for them, and call them Uniones; as a man would say, Singular, and by themselves alone.' It may be observed that pearls were supposed to possess an exhilarating quality. Thus, Rondelet, lib. i, de Testas. c. xv: 'Uniones que a concis, &c., valide cordiales sunt.' Clarendon: Mr King (Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, &c., p. 267) says: 'As no two pearls were ever found exactly alike, this circumstance gave origin to the name “unio” (unique). But in Low Latin “Margarita(um),” and “perla” became a generic name, “unio” being restricted to the fine spherical specimens.'

Hence STEEVENS conjectured that, if the man who was corpulent enough to act Falstaff and Henry VIII should also appear as Hamlet, this observation was put by Sh, into 'the mouth of her majesty to apologize for the want of such elegance of person as an audience might expect to meet with in the representative of the youthful Prince of Denmark, whom Oph. speaks of as the "glass of fashion and the mould of form."' MALONE: Wright and Downes, the prompter, concur in saying that Taylor was the performer of Hamlet. Roberts alone has asserted (and apparently without authority) that Lowin acted this part. But, in truth, I am convinced it was neither Taylor nor Lowin, but probably Burbage. Taylor apparently was not of the company till late, perhaps after 1615, and Lowin not till after 1603. COLLIER, in his Memoirs of the Principal Actors in the Plays of Sh., Sh. Soc. Publications, 1846, p. 51, shows conclusively that Burbage was the original Hamlet, and cites in proof the Elegy upon him, copied from a MS in the possession of Heber, containing an enumeration of the various parts in which Burbage was distinguished. Shakespeare's words are there used in reference to the fatness of the actor: 'No more young Hamlet, though but scant of breath, shall cry "Revenge!" for his dear father's death.' STAUNTON: Does the Queen refer to Ham. or Laer.? CLARKE: We believe that this refers not to Burbage, but to Ham, himself, who, as a sedentary student, a man of contemplative habits, one given rather to reflection than to action, might naturally be supposed to be of somewhat plethoric constitution. This accords well with his not daring to 'drink' while he is heated with the fencing bout; with his being of a 'complexion' that makes him feel the weather 'sultry and hot'; with his custom of walking 'four hours together in the lobby;' with his 'having a special 'breathing time of the day:' and with his telling Hor. that he has 'been in continual practice' of fencing,—as though he took set exercise for the purpose of counteracting his constitutional tendency to that full habit of body which is apt to be the result of sedentary occupation and a too sedulous addiction to scholarly pursuits. W. ALDIS WRIGHT (N. & Q., 9 March, 1867, p. 202) states that, in 1664, he received a letter from Dr Ingleby, communicating a 'fine reading' proposed by 'Mr H. WYETH, of Winchester,' of faint for 'fat.' FLEHWE (Hamlet, Prins von Dänemark, Hamburg, 1862, p. 214) refers to IV, vii, 158, and conjectures that the same word is here used: hot.

[Staunton's text, followed by Delius, thus reads: 'The point—envenom'd too!—']

311. but hurt] ROHRBACH (p. 37): Claudius's last words are characteristic; he says that he is merely wounded, although he knows that the sword which has stabbed him is poisoned. 313. Drink] Capell (1, 149): The literal sense of these words leads us to imagine that Ham. pours some of the poisoned cup into the mouth of the King as he lies gasping, or else dashes what is left on't upon him. But how, then, could Hor. in either case say what he does in line 329? Ham. would hardly pour it so gently as to leave much behind. It is probable that the expression is figurative, and spoken upon making the King, who had declared he was only 'hurt,' taste again of his 'sword.'

313. union] Caldecott: There may be a play here upon the word 'union.'

Morley: Was this cursed drug the pearl that you said you were putting in?

318. Dies] Caldecott: We here find Lear, who was not wounded till after Ham., first dying of a poison described as singularly quick in its operation. The purposes of the drama might require that Ham. should survive, and the same quantity of poison may affect different constitutions differently, but the poison of the 'anointed' sword, which had first entered the body, and was steeped with the blood, of Ham., must, one would think, in the second instance have lost something of its active quality, and would consequently have been more slowly operative upon Lear. [Possibly Ham. gave Lear. a mortal thrust in return for the 'scratch,' which was all that Lear. was aiming at. So that Lear. dies of the wound, Ham. of the poison. Ed.]

337. live behind] Staunton: Compare, 'No glory lives behind the back of such.'—Much Ado, III, i, 110. White: The reading of the F. F. ineluctably makes 'Things standing thus unknown' parenthetical, and as Q. Q. has 'shall I leave behind me?', and Q. Q. 'What a scandal wouldst thou leave behind,' I have no doubt
If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story.— [March afar off, and shot within.

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,
To the ambassadors of England gives
This warlike volley.

Ham. Oh, I die, Horatio;
The potent poison quite o'er-crows my spirit;
I cannot live to hear the news from England.
But I do prophesy the election lights
On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice;
So tell him, with the occurments, more and less,
Which have solicited—the rest is silence.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart.—Good night, sweet prince,
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!—
Why does the drum come hither?

345. solicited] Warburton: That is, brought on the event. Heath (p. 551): That is, incited me to the act of vengeance I have just performed. Mason: The sentence is left imperfect. Walker (Crit. iii, 274): 'Solicit,' like many other words derived from the Latin, as religion for worship or service, etc., had not yet lost its strict Latin meaning. Lettsom (foot-note to foregoing): The original signification of the Latin word seems to have been to move, and the various meanings attached to it by lexicographers are but modifications of this primary one. Ham. seems to have been thinking of the events that had 'solicited' or moved him to recommend Fort. as successor to the throne. Clarendon: Compare Rich. II: I, ii, 2. [See Mach. I, iii, 130.]

345. The rest is silence] Clarendon: If Hamlet's speech is interrupted by his death, it would be more natural that these words should be spoken by Hor. Morelly: To Ham. silence would come as the most welcome and most gracious of friends, as relief to the action-wearyed soul, freedom from conflicting motives, leisure for searching out all problems, release from the toil of finding words for thought; as the one sole language of immortality, the only true utterance of the infinite.

345. White: The O, o, o, of the Folio is the addition, doublet, of some actor.

346. cracks] Elsewhere used by Sh. where we should now use break. See Per. III, ii, 75; Cor. V, iii, 9.

347. rest] Collier (ed. ii): The remainder of the tragedy is crack through with a pen in the (MS) and the word Finis subjoined, to show that it was there at an end. The concluding lines also are thus converted into a couplet: 'Now cracks a noble heart: good night, be blest, And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest.' Another 'tag' is added afterwards, of a very poor and inanimate character, most unlike the language of Sh. which, it seems, the performer of the part of Hor. was also to deliver when the piece was abbreviated; it is as follows:—While I remain behind to tell a tale, That shall hereafter turn the hearers pale.' Although the conclusion is hastened in this way, the old annotator has continued his corrections to the end of the tragedy, as it has come down to us; but from what source he derived his information we know not; perhaps he had at one time witnessed the performance in its entirety, and had remedied defects from the recitation of the actors.

351. quarry] The game killed. See Macb. IV, iii, 206.
351. cries on] JOHNSON: To exclaim against. I suppose when unfair sportsmen destroyed more quarry or game than was reasonable the censure was to cry Havock. CALDECOTT: See Oth. V, i, 48. WHITE: 'This heap of dead proclaims an indiscriminate slaughter.' CLARENDON: 'This pile of corpses urges to merciless slaughter, where no quarter is given.' In the Statutes of Warre, &c., by King Henry VIII (1513), quoted in Todd's ed. of Johnson's Dict., it is enacted, 'That no man be so hardy to cry havock, upon payable of hym that is founde begynner, to dye therefor; and the remenants to be emprisoned, and their bodys punished at the kynges will.' See also the Ordinances of War of Richard II and Henry V, published in the Black Book of the Admiralty (ed. Twiss), i, 455, 462. The etymology of the word is purely conjectural. Some derive it from the Welsh havoc, destruction; others from the A. S. havoc, a hawk; others from the French hai, voux! a cry to bounds.

352. feast] CALDECOTT: This allusion has, no doubt, some connection with the usage of all the northern nations, their Ambarvalia or Arval suppers referred to by Ham. I, ii, 180. Compare 'Death feasts.'—King John; II, i, 354.
352. toward] See I, i, 77.

352. eternal] WALKER (Crit. i, 62) gives two other instances besides this and I, v, 21 (which see), where 'eternal' seems to be used for 'infernial': Faul. Cast. I, ii, 160; Oth. IV, ii, 154. 'This seems to be still in use among the common people. I need scarcely notice the Yankee 'tarnal.'
First Amb. The sight is dismal; 322
And our affairs from England come too late;
The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead.
Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth, 360
Had it the ability of life to thank you;
He never gave commandment for their death.
But since, so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arrived, give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view;
And let me speak to the yet unknowing world
How these things came about; so shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts,
Of accidental judgements, casual slaughters,
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forced cause, 370

359. his mouth] Of course this refers to the King, as Warburton long ago pointed out. But, strange to say, Theobald referred it to Ham., a noteworthy slip in one of the best editors Sh. ever had, and it is quite as remarkable that the slip escaped the notice of the subsequent Variorum editors, who omitted no chance of 368. carnal] Malone: Of sanguinary and unnatural acts, to which the perpeterator was instigated by concupiscence, or, to use Shakespeare's own words, by 'carnal stings.' Hor. alludes to the murder of old Hamlet by his brother, previous to his incestuous union with Gertrude. A Remark asks, 'Was the relationship between the usurper and the deceased king a secret confined to Hor.? ' No, but the murder of Hamlet by Claudius was a secret which the young Prince had imparted to Hor., and to him alone; and to this it is he principally, though covertly, alludes.

369. 370. Of accidental... cause] Delius: The first line refers to Pol., the second to Ros. and Guil., whose deaths were 'forced' on Ham.

Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,

For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune;
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more;
But let this same be presently perform’d,

376. rights of memory] MALONE: Some rights which are remembered.
379. voice will draw on] THEOBALD: Hor. is to deliver the message given him by Ham, lines 343, 344, and justly infers that Hamlet’s ‘voice’ will be seconded by others.
380. same] COLLIER (ed. ii): The alteration by the (MS) is so much superior to the QqFl in reference to the words ‘perform’d’ and ‘stage,’ which occur just afterwards, that we make the change, not only without reluctance, but with thankfulness for the improvement upon the usual tame and unfigurative line. ‘Same’ for scene was the easiest possible misprint from carelessly written manuscript.

without bringing guilt on himself by his death; no fear that his sleep should have bad dreams in it now. Those whom he loved, his mother, Laer., Oph., have all died guiltless or forgiven. Late, and under the strong compulsion of approaching death, he has done, and well done, the inevitable task from which his gentle nature shrank. Why, then, any farther thought, in the awful presence of death, of crimes, conspiracies, vengeance? Think that he has been slain in battle, like his Sea-King forefathers; and let the booming cannon be his mourners.
